Rains Bring Relief To North Iowa; Storms Damage Property

Kluckhohn Store Damaged By Fire Thursday A. M.

FIRE IN BASEMENT HARD TO BRING UNDER CONTROL

Damage To Building And Stock Was Several Thousand Dollars

A disasterous fire was discovered at the Kluckhohn general store at about 3 30 o'clock Thursday morning when a noise awakened Mrs. Hulda Wiles, cafe owner next door to the store Mrs Wiles and her helper Miss Winnie Fuller, investigated and saw smoke coming from the store and then awakened P M Wilson, druggist, who turned in the alarm.

Fire In Basement

The local fire company had difficulty in locating the fire as the smoke was so dense in the building that it took some time before the flames were located in the basement and were burning in the floor joists Firemen fought the flames for two hours before they could be extinguished as the hose had to be played through small basement windows.

Stock Smoke Damaged

Flames came up through an elevator and burned merchandise on a balcony at the rear of the room but most of the damage to goods was caused by the dense smoke

The floor, balcony and elevator in the rear of the store will have to be rebuilt, and the entire interior refinished

Frank Kluckhohn stated it was impossible to estimate the damage until an inventory had been made of the damaged goods, but he said it probably would be between three and four thousand dollars

Origin Of Blaze Not Known

Just what started the fire is mere speculation Two probable causes are thought possible that lightning may have struck the building and followed the elevator shaft to the basement where empty crates may have ignited A long broken crack in the plaster of the ceiling, extending from the front of the store back to the elevator may have been the path of a bolt of lightning

The other theory is that a careless smoker may have flipped a cigar butt or a cigarette on the floor and the burning butt may have rolled down the elevator shaft and thus started a fire

There was no evidence of fire when the store was closed Wednesday evening

LIBERTY FARMERS' UNION MET MONDAY, AUG. 3RD

On the evening of August 3rd a large crowd of members and friends gathered at the Lester Stille home for the monthly meeting of the Liberty Local of the Farmers' Union.

After the business meeting a very interesting program was given Mr Garber of Des Moines, opened the program with a short talk concerning the Farmers' Union organization. This was followed by the principal speaker of the evening, Mr Lloyd Smith of Forest City His subject was the Townsend Old Age Pension plan Mr. Smith is a very capable speaker and his explanation of the Townsend Plan was understood and enjoyed by all present.

Mr Garber then entertained with several piano and vocal numbers. Bob Bernig of Burchinal, Miss Sanders of Tulsa, Okla., and Mrs Charlie Ax of Klemme also gave musical numbers.

Coffee and cake were then served to the group.

It was decided to have an ice cream social at the next meeting which will be held at the Liberty school house No. 7, Monday evening, September 7th.

MEDICAL ASSN. PLANS TO ERADICATE DIPTHERIA

Several counties in Iowa are "hotbeds" of diptheria life-loss Hancock county is one of them This and 28 other counties account for more than three-fourths of all of the deaths resulting from diptheria during the past seven years, exclusive of those occuring in cities of 10,000 or over

To suffer an attack of diptheria and, thereby to gain protection is dangerous and today is unnecessary More than twenty years ago doctors found out definitely how to prevent this disease In spite of this fact, even today diptheria is one of the serious communicable diseases of childhood Diptheria is most fatal in the earliest years of life. More than 60% of the deaths from diptheria involve youngsters in the age group, 5 years and under

In an effort to reduce the danger from diptheria in this county the Hancock-Winnebago County Medical Society and the Iowa State Department of Health are cooperating to carry out a County wide Diptheria Preventetive Program during the month of September This program is a part of the broad maternal and child health service of the Federal Social Security Act for the State of Iowa

Mrs Grace Haven, maternal and child health nurse from the Iowa State Department of Health is in Hancock county in the interest of the program

It should be the purpose of all parents to see that their children are given the protective treatment for diptheria During the program to be carried out in Hancock county particular attention is being paid to children between 9 and 24 months of age Arrangements have been made which make it possible for children in this age group whose parents reside in this county to receive a single dose of a diptheria preventive agent without cost to the parents

Children of all ages should receive the preventive treatment For this reason arrangements have been made whereby children over 24 months of age will receive the treatment during September for a minimum fee

Preventive treatments stimulate the child's body to produce nature's protective substance against diptheria without subjecting the youngster to the disability and life-loss hazards of that disease Protection develops slowly, requiring a period of from 6 weeks to 6 months before it becomes complete It is a harmless treatment for the child Once the protection is complete it lasts many years.

Consult the advertisement in this paper for a list of the names of the physicians who are cooperating as well as for information concerning the days and the time when the offer prevails All the parents need do is to take the child to the office of one of the physicians named on the day and at the time specified and the doctor will give the child the treatment. No parent should fail to take advantage of this opportunity.

Klemme Public Schools Will Begin Monday, August 31st

SUPT. GALBRETH PREDICTS A LARGE ENROLLMENT

An examination of the records following the all-school registration Monday reveals a decided gain in the number of tuition students that will be attending the Klemme Public Schools during the coming year A slight increase in the general enrollment is also expected

The high school is receiving a setback in its efforts toward an increased enrollment by the fact that only eight freshmen are coming up from the local grade but eleven new tuition students from the surrounding country districts have already signed up and there is a good chance that at least one or two more will enroll

The grade registration is also incomplete because the first students were not asked to appear Monday, but an increase in this department appears to be certain too.

Second hand books were checked in Monday and will go on sale at the school house next Tuesday, August 25 Anyone else having books to sell should bring them to the building next Monday Aug ust 25 First year Latin books should be added to the list of those needed this year Books will be sold for cash, but students will be given credit on their second hand books that have been sold

The superintendent will be out of town for the remainder of this week but will be at the school house every morning next week to answer inquiries regarding work for the coming year Students who have not already registered are requested to do so as early as possible that week

An interesting letter from Martin K. Elstad, new high school science and music instructor. was received last week by Supt Galbreth Mr Elstad is touring Norway and other European countries this summer with the Luther College concert band The letter of which the following is a part, was written aboard the steamship, Mosken

The Mosken
Aug 4, 1936

Mr W Henry Galbreth
Klemme, Iowa

Dear Mr Galbreth:

This country certainly differs from ours if newspaper reports on your temperatures are correct. We are wearing heavy sweaters, coats, top coats, and gloves; and we are wondering if it is really warm over there

The date of our sailing from England has been delayed two days by the Cunard White Star Line officials. I do not know whether this will make us two days later in reaching Decorah or not If it does I certainly hope that it does not inconvenience you too much I will write to you again as soon as I find out something definite, which may not be until I reach New York again

So far on this trip I've seen more than I had ever expected to see, and I guess there is more in store for us We are living on a 140-foot steamer, the Mosken, and it is taking us along the coast and up into all the fjords for which Norway is so famous We are travelling a distance equal to a round trip to America on this little boat, so we're getting to be regular seamen We take seas laughingly now that would have given our stomachs acute distress three weeks ago. You should see this thing roll when we get out in the open with it. Two times at breakfast the table has tipped over on us boys and spilled all dishes and food We tipped over too, so we couldn't stop it

In this country all scenes have water and land in them, and by far the largest percentage of the population lives from the water. There are fishing boats all around us Incidentally. I've eaten more and better fish than I had ever seen in America. The people here shuck and eat shrimps like we do peanuts

Everything here moves at a slower pace than it does in America. Hotels, as well as all restaurants, cafes and night clubs, lock up at 12:00 o'clock All business places lock up at 5 00 o'clock People here reckon time to twenty-four hours instead of twelve It eliminates A M and P M.

One can't help noticing the beautiful sweaters here, and when one asks a man or young person where he got his sweater, the answer invariably is that his mother has made it. Ask a woman where she got her sweater, and she has made it.

The fair season is on here now, and we have played at three so far. At each they have displays of beautiful hand-made articles, and all are for sale Hand-woven and embroidered bed spreads, table cloths,doilies, etc., are all very cheap.

Hoping that arrangements at Klemme can be made satisfactorily, I remain

Sincerely yours,
Martin K. Elstad

The arrangements that Mr Elstad speaks of are those that will be necessary to provide for his classes during the first week of school. He will probably be a week late arriving in Klemme on account of the extended tour that the Luther band is making. Arrangements are being made to have his classes taught by someone else until he ges here.

LAW CLAMPS DOWN ON THE TRAFFIC VIOLATORS

The "law" has clamped down on several traffic violators in the past couple of weeks.

Claire Tanner was hailed into Henry Suckow's court charged with reckless driving Tanner got in bad when he was driving in a reckless manner and speeding in the town of Klemme Evidence showed that he had applied for a drivers license four times but failed to pass the tests and was refused a driver's license Tanner was sentenced to fifteen days in the Forest City jail and will not be allowed to drive a car

John Pals, of Meservey, who figured in an accident east of Goodell when his car plunged into the river, pleaded guilty in a Cerro Gordo court and was fined $300. Charges placed against him were driving while intoxicated His driver's license was revoked for six months

Patrolman Benedict arrested Fred Larson, of Minneapolis and placed charges of driving while intoxicated against him Larson posted a $500 appearance bond and his case will be heard in the September term of court at Garner

The state department is clamping down on violators and severe penalties are being dished out.

HEAVY ELECTRICAL STORM DOES EXTENSIVE DAMAGE

2 Good Rains Are Great Benefit To All North Iowa Crops

The biggest news in Hancock County and all of North Iowa last Thursday was a most welcome rain which fell in the morning ranging from a half inch in the southern part of the county to better than two inches in the north part of the county Around Klemme it was estimated about three-fourths of an inch fell The rain fell with very little wind damage and was the first good rain since the middle of June and was a great benefit to all crops.

Forest City reported over 2 inches precipitation; Garner 1 inch; Clear Lake and Mason City both 2½ inches

Storm Saturday Causes Damage

A wind, electrical and rain storm which started Saturday afternoon at about 3 30 o'clock, following a day of high temperature and excessive humidity, caused quite a lot of damage around Klemme and vicinity The storm broke out of the west and was accompanied by a mile a minute wind that flattened corn and damaged buildings A heavy rain fell with it and the storm was accompanied by heavy lightning

Farm Buildings Suffer

A barn on the Henry Smidt farm nine miles west of Klemme was flattened and a couple of horses killed Roofs on the barns at the Wilbur Haefner and Fred Klinge farms were damaged by the wind and the silo at the John Terhufen farm was badly damaged These latter three places are in the same neighborhood in Liberty township A haystack at George Schoenwetter's farm was struck by lightning and burned to the ground The machine shed on the Alfred Schlei farm west of Klemme was destroyed by the wind Scores of straw piles and hay stacks were blown apart and scattered all over several farms.

Damage In Klemme

The severe electrical storm did quite a bit of damage in town. J. N Day's house was struck twice during the storm, but as the house is protected by lightning rods no damage was done

A heavy bolt of lightning hit the tower on the Methodist church knocking off shingles and scattering bricks and splitting the north side of the tower for about fifteen feet.

The west wall of the Creamery will have to be rebuilt as it was damaged by lighting and wind. Hundreds of bricks were knocked loose when it is thought lightning may have struck the smoke stack and followed a guy wire to the wall.

A number of windows were blown out in homes and many large branches of trees were blown down by the heavy wind

Many other small buildings and farm machinery were reported blown over and damaged at many surrounding farms.

Over an inch of rain fell during the storm, and this of course, was a great benefit and offset some of the damage caused by the storm.

More Rain Again Monday

Now that it has started to rain in North Iowa it seems that any small cloud will bring moisture. Showers again Monday and Tuesday night netted nearly an inch of rain here.

Noting a sign in a printing establishment reading: "We require part payment in advance on work for customers we do not know," the Brewton, Ala., Standard remarks: "We require full payment from some of those we do know."

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted
by William Bruckart

National Press Building Washington, D. C.

Washington.—The United States is being given an object lesson in what happens when government attempts to interfere with nature.

The People Must Pay

American farmers these days are threshing their wheat crop. The production is that of a reduced acreage, an acreage that was planned on theory by the Department of Agriculture. The result is that this year's American wheat crop will approximate 640,000,000 bushels. That is about 145,000,000 bushels less than the average crop during the five years from 1929 to 1933. The result is a shortage.

Department of Agriculture figures indicate that the total wheat crop in the world this year will be something like 650,000,000 bushels below the annual production. In other words, the wheat crop is short everywhere on earth and the result is obvious.

In our own case, there is normally a carry-over each year of about 125,000,000 bushels but due to the shortage of the crop this year that carry-over is insufficient to make up the needs of domestic consumption.

Consequently, we soon will see heavy importations of Canadian wheat, a wheat that can be blended in milling with our own production and a very satisfactory flour results. Yet, it must be remembered that on all importations of wheat from Canada or anywhere else, a tariff of 42 cents a bushel must be paid. It is clear, therefore, that consumers of bread must pay that tariff because the importers are going to pass that item of expense along as part of the cost of the flour. In addition to the shortage in the United States, Canadian wheat production is reported to be something like 100,000,000 bushels under normal. There is sufficient production in Canada to permit of export, of course, but the shortage is bound to be reflected in the prices.

And mention of the price brings us back to the individual effect of the combination of acreage, reduced by government edict, plus the act of nature in visiting a drouth upon us. Scarcity always results in higher prices. It is the operation of the law of supply and demand. The Roosevelt farm policy has been predicated on the theory that scarcity would produce higher prices and thereby add to the farm income. But drouth and other production hazards cannot be predicted and, therefore, the American people find themselves in a position where the unpredictable has happened and the farmers are not getting the benefit of higher prices on a natural and normal production.

There seems to be a stronger demand for wheat now than at any time during the last five or six years. It indicates a restoration of buying power on the part of the masses In other words, industry again is opening up to some extent and employing workers although the increase in employment has been small thus far.

Industry Opens Up

In consequence of this combination of circumstances, there is now a seller's market in wheat instead of a buyer's market in wheat. To say it another way, there are more people seeking to buy wheat than there are seeking to sell it and the consumers of flour will pay the bill. By way of contrast with present conditions, it may be pointed out that world wheat consumption has exceeded world wheat production in every year except one since 1929. In the 1932 crop year there was slightly more wheat produced in the world than was consumed. The result of the steady growth in consumption over production in the last few years has been to wipe out all of the carry-over—wheat stored in bins and elevators throughout the world—and in every country users of wheat are scraping the bottoms of their bins. The tragedy of it all is that, because of the reduced acreage and the drouth in the United States, American farmers are not in a position to take advantage of the higher prices thus established by the sale of surplus wheat which may have been accumulated if the acreage had been normal.

Instead of the United States really controlling the market for wheat, we are in a position where a good many other countries may be encouraged to grow more wheat. The natural and obvious results of this will be to further curtail the outlet for American wheat which so long has been relied on by many foreign nations that are non-producers of wheat.

I do not know how far the New Deal intends to go in revising its basic economic policy regarding crop controlling. I can be sure of only one thing in regard to the New Deal plans: The visitation of the drouth in two years in which the political planners of the New Deal attempted to upset natural laws has proved the inability of man to alter the course of nature and by the same token these conditions have proved the inability of government to change human nature. I do not know whether others will agree with my conclusion or not but I am of the opinion that the American farmers are paying dearly for the crop control checks they received in the past two years. Even with a crop shortened by drouth, if there had been the normal acreage of wheat, American farmers would have reaped the reward to which they are so justly entitled.

A year or two ago, a committee of the American Bar association made a report definitely critical of the New Deal administration for having created so many agencies to which had been given functions almost like the courts. That report pointed out how such units as the now dead NRA and the equally dead AAA could issue rules and regulations that were enforceable as law. They called attention to the further fact that countless of these rules and regulations carried strict and severe penalties, even to the extent of a jail term for an individual violator.

Bar Offers New Plan

Lately, another committee of the American Bar association has published another report, again calling attention to the un-American principles established in such bureaucratic control. It offers a constructive proposal for the elimination of bureaucratic management of individual affairs from Washington. It proposes the establishment of an administration court which would have power to enforce these rules and regulations but would be equipped with the judicial right of determination so that the thousands upon thousands of regulations with their various penalties would not be enforced upon an individual accused of their violation without giving that alleged violator the right of a hearing. The committee proposal, in other words, would put an end to determination of violations by one bureaucrat.

Ultimately, the proposed court would take over the judicial work of all of the administrative agencies in Washington now numbering something like 75. The initial operation of the court would be limited until it could bring something like uniformity out of the chaos now existing for it is well known that in many cases two governmental agencies will have rules on the same point and those rules will not be the same. In some aggravated situations, it has been found that one agency will prescribe a penalty against an individual business for doing one thing while another agency will have no penalty for the same act. Another instance is known where two agencies have virtually the same regulations but the penalties in the two rules are different.

I suppose the condition can be explained by the fact that dozens of new bureaus have been set up under the scores of New Deal laws and that in the haste to get them into operation, no co-ordination was had between the various groups, but it is my belief that private citizens cannot be blamed for this condition. Since they cannot be blamed for failure of government to function properly, they ought not be compelled to answer for the silly differences in law which bureaucrats have written under authority of congress to draft necessary regulations.

Too Many Bureaus

After all, congress is really to blame for this condition. It rushed through laws which President Roosevelt demanded and it did not take time to debate the provisions nor did it examine the sections to know fully what results would flow from them. In many cases, too many, statements of general legislative policy were not clear and congress abdicated its duties to the extent that it wrote into those laws provisions saying that the agency which was to enforce the particular law was given authority to write whatever rules and regulations were found to be necessary. Some authority of this kind always has been given in order to make the national laws flexible but they never have been given to such an extent as they have in the last three years.

Insufficient time has elapsed since the American Bar association committee came forth with its administrative court proposal for an analysis to be made of its potentialities. It may, and probably does, have weaknesses. It does, however, have a strong point in the general idea that a judicial body should determine whether an individual citizen has violated a bureaucrat's law and what the penalty should be rather than have that bureaucrat sit as prosecutor, judge and jury in telling the individual citizen what his crime has been.

"Dried Up" Wells Made to Produce More Petroleum

Chemist Patents Process for Raising Oil Yield

WASHINGTON. — Spent or "dried up" oil wells would be made to ooze forth more black gold, according to a "process for increasing the productivity of wells" recently patented here (patent No. 2,038,720) by Melvin De Groote, of St. Louis.

Such simple chemicals as hydrochloric acid and sodium fluoride, powerful roach killer, when properly emulsified and injected into the well would do the trick, claims the inventor.

The "sick" oil well when given a dose of this medicine would again yield oil trapped in the earth beyond the reach of man.

Wells Not All Dry.

Not all oil wells that stop producing are really dry, that is, their supply of oil is not completely exhausted. The stoppage of output may be caused by the building up of solid deposits of wax or of inorganic salts, such as cause water hardness, in the channels or pores of the oil-bearing rock.

Naturally, when pores and channels are clogged oil will not flow and the well's output eventually declines to the point where it is not practical to work the well, although there may still be much oil present.

The inventor's mixture of hydrochloric acid and sodium fluoride is intended to regenerate the productivity of such wells. It has the property of dissolving out the mineral deposits which clog the pores and channels.

Acids Make Opening.

Not only that, but injected into the well, the chemicals eat out new openings in the rock making it more porous.

The hydrochloric acid in the mixture dissolves out the calcareous or limestone-like deposits. At the same time some of the acid reacts with the sodium fluoride to liberate the powerful hydrofluoric acid which dissolves away the clogging silica deposit—most difficult to dissolve clogging mineral.

New Magnesium Pellets May Help Save Wild Ducks

WASHINGTON.—Magnesium added to the lead used in duck shot may give wild ducks a chance for their lives if the hunter misses, the U. S. Biological Survey has announced. Paradoxically, the widespread use of this new type of ammunition would result in increasing the number of ducks.

Lead pellets of the kind now used get two chances at the ducks, Survey scientists explain. The first is the hunter's honest chance to knock down a bird when he fires. The second puts no ducks in anybody's pot, but only kills the poor fowl by slow lead poisoning.

Havoc Is Wrought.

Shotgun pellets falling thick into hunted-over marshes where wild ducks feed are shoveled up as the ducks grub in the mud for food. They are retained in the gizzard like small pebbles, and as they are slowly rubbed down some of the lead dissolves and finds its way into the blood stream.

Among these is a paralysis of legs and wings, so that if the poison does not kill the birds outright they either die of exposure or fall easy victims to predatory animals and birds.

Steepest Railroad Is Located in Oregon

RIPPLE, ORE.—What is believed to be the world's steepest standard-gauge railroad is located near here. It is 3,421 feet in length, starting up on a 28 per cent grade, continuing on a 79 per cent and cutting down to 50 per cent as it nears the top of the incline.

The railroad brings logs from a 300,000,000-foot stand of timber lying on the high mountain ridges and delivers them at the foot of the canyon.

The stand of Douglas fir and West Coast hemlock to be cut is very valuable, covering a great space, so the matter of its removal is an important one, involving as it does the lowering of logs 1,500 to 2,500 feet down the narrow and precipitous side of the canyon of the Salmonberry river and getting them to the railroad at a convenient point.

Bridal Veils Used in Ancient Times to Scare Demons

Greeks of Old Followed Quaint Marriage Rites

THE ancient custom of veiling a bride was once a trick to mislead mischievous demons.

Thus Prof. Ludwig Deubner of the Berlin university explains bridal veils, which in ancient times were more enveloping and mysterious than the airy veil of a modern June bride.

Fear of demons, it appears, plagued the ancient Greeks in a fashion reminiscent of the fairy-tale fear of the wicked fairy who always turned up for trouble at weddings and christenings.

Brides' Disguises.

Describing lengths to which wedding parties would go to foil demons, Prof. Deubner said that brides in Sparta were dressed in men's clothing. The Spartan maid, dressed like a man and with her hair shorn, was shut up in a dark room to await her bridegroom's arrival and a dramatic rescue.

Other ancient peoples tried other confusing practices On the island of Kos, near Asia Minor, it was the bridegroom who dressed up. He wore women's clothes.

Prof. Deubner finds evidence that Greek marriage customs are related to customs of other Indo-Germanic Aryan peoples, and some can still be found surviving in parts of Greece.

Parents Made Matches.

Describing ancient Greek weddings, Prof. Deubner stated that as marriages were arranged by the parents, the couple-to-be were not consulted and often became acquainted only after they were wed.

The popular month for weddings corresponded to late January and early February in our calendar. The bride sacrificed her hair, her girdle, and her toys at the altar of Artemis.

Corresponding to a modern church wedding was a sacrifice rite to the goddess Hera. During the wedding banquet the bridegroom removed the bride's veil. Wedding gifts went by a name meaning unveiling, because they were received after the removal of the veil.

Guests accompanied the couple to their home and threw old shoes to ward off evil. The groom lifted his bride from the cart in which they rode, and she—like ancient German brides — walked thrice around the hearth-fire in token of her entrance to a new family.

The total of typhoid deaths for the 93 large cities annually surveyed by the American Medical association was notably less in 1935 than in 1934, 385 as against 470.

At the other end of the scale are seven cities with high death rates from typhoid. In the order of high mortality from the disease, they are. El Paso, Texas, New Orleans; Nashville, Tenn.; Tampa, Fla. Norfolk, Va.; Knoxville and Memphis, Tenn.

Research in Soybeans Brings Federal Medal

WASHINGTON.—Expeditions bringing back to the United States over 2,000 distinct varieties of soybeans, as well as numerous other useful and ornamental plants, won for P. H. Dorsett, veteran scientist of the U. S. Department of Agriculture, the Meyer Medal for Distinguished Service in Plant Introduction.

Presentation was made by Dr. David Fairchild, on behalf of the council of the American Genetic association, at the plant introduction station of the U. S. Department of Agriculture at Bell, Md.

Mr. Dorsett's expeditions have taken him to China, Brazil, and the West Indies. It was from his Chinese collections of over 6,000 seed samples that the 2,000 soybean varieties were isolated. Some of these are already in wide use.

"The Man Who-O-O"

Tales and Traditions from American Political History

BY FRANK E. HAGEN AND ELMO SCOTT WATSON

ROOSTER CROW

THE Gooding tavern in Greenfield, Ind., has long since disappeared but it deserves to be remembered as the birthplace of a familiar emblem of one of the major political parties, a symbol that is still in use after nearly a century.

Back in the thirties it was owned by Joseph Chapman, an ardent Democrat, who had the habit of imitating a rooster when exulting over victories by his party. So when his political enemies won, they taunted him by shouting: "Now crow, Chapman, crow!"

In 1840 Chapman was a candidate for the state legislature from Hancock county. In that year Democratic prospects were far from bright. The country still remembered the panic of 1837 and blamed President Van Buren for it. Moreover, the "singing Whigs" were making a powerful appeal to the voters with their shouts of "Tippecanoe and Tyler, Too!" and their log cabin and hard cider symbols.

In the midst of the campaign George Pattison, editor of the Indianapolis Constitution, wrote a letter to William Sebastian of Greenfield in which he said: "I have been informed by a Democrat that in one part of your county 30 Van Buren men have turned for Harrison. Please let me know if such be the fact. I think such a deplorable state of facts can not exist. If so I will visit Hancock and address the people relative to the policy of the Democratic party. I have not time to spare, but I will refuse to eat or sleep or rest so long as anything can be done. Do, for heaven's sake, stir up the Democracy. See Chapman, tell him not to do as he did heretofore. He used to create unnecessary alarms; he must crow; we have much to crow over. I will insure this county to give a Democratic majority of 200 votes. Spare no pains."

This letter accidentally fell into the hands of the Whigs and was published in an Indianapolis paper with a view to ridiculing the Democrats. But it proved to be a boomerang for the Whigs. "Crow, Chapman, crow!" became the slogan of the Indiana Democrats and spread all over the country.

When the Indiana Sentinel was launched in 1841 it carried at the top of its front page the picture of a proud rooster and under it was the slogan "Crow, Chapman, crow!" Other Democratic newspapers began carrying the same picture and slogan and soon the rooster, crowing proudly whether in victory or defeat, became the accepted symbol of the Democratic party. Despite the later popularity of the donkey, it is still a favorite symbol—thanks to John Chapman of Greenfield, Ind., who taught his fellow-Democrats how to crow.

WINNING WITH BUCKEYES

WHEN Martin Van Buren, bosom friend and successor to fiery Andrew Jackson, undertook to succeed himself in the White House in the race of 1840 something new in political history was the result.

Van Buren not only was defeated. He insured the election of Gen. William Henry Harrison of Ohio and he endowed Ohio with the name of the Buckeye state, which flourishes today.

It all came about when the cry was taken up by Van Buren's campaigners that Harrison was more perfectly fitted to live in a log cabin and drink hard cider than to go to Washington as the nation's head.

What a boomerang that proved to be!

The only background for the attack was that when the hero of Tippecanoe retired from battle he selected a site overlooking the Ohio river in the southwestern part of the state, built a double log house and finished it with shining white clapboards.

Ohioans naturally resented the slur on their habits of living, including the charge of tippling. Miniature log cabins, symbolic of pioneer life and the vigor which pushed civilization westward from the more effete east, made their appearance throughout the state.

These cabins were reproduced from buckeye logs. So were the canes carried by thousands of marchers who participated in parades to advance the candidacy of Harrison. The cabins were mounted on wagons and within each was a horny - handed frontiersman, quaffing hard cider.

Van Buren was not neglected while this was going on. He was attacked by the Ohioans as a snob with a penchant for European customs.

By the time the "Buckeye" parades popularized and spread east of the Alleghenies, Van Buren's managers realized their mistake and tried in vain to stem the tide. It was too late. Gen. Harrison won the election, hands down, and Ohio has been known ever since as the Buckeye State.

New Locarno Pact May Give Europe Security

WHILE the nations of Europe were worrying over the Spanish rebellion and the danger that it might bring about open rupture among the Fascist and anti-Fascist governments of the continent, steps were taken to assure peace. Germany and Italy accepted the invitation of Great Britain, France and Belgium to participate in a conference this fall from which it is hoped another and better Locarno pact will emerge.

No date for the conference has been set, but it was expected to be held either just before or soon after the meeting of the league of nations assembly in Geneva in September.

Zioncheck has settled down to private law practice.

Progress of Revolution in Spanish Republic

GEN. FRANCISCO FRANCO'S rebel forces in Spain, according to late reports, were pressing the government troops seriously and winning some bloody encounters. This despite the claims of Madrid that the Fascists had been checked. The rebel columns advancing on the capital from the south were reported to be threatening communications between Madrid and the eastern seacoast at Valencia and Alicante, chief sources of the government's food supplies. Leaders of the insurgents claimed they held Huelva, important seaport, and all the territory between Seville and the Portuguese border.

Gen. Franco

The government, now a red dictatorship, has taken possession of all church property and assumed control of all industry and agriculture. It also has confiscated the merchant marine to form a defense fleet. The loyalists were encouraged by victories in and around San Sabastian.

Fascist Italy has been accused of aiding the Spanish rebels, and it is asserted a number of Italian bombing planes were sent to them in Morocco. The leftist French government naturally is in sympathy with the Madrid government and Frenchmen, unarmed, have been given permission to cross the border to aid in putting down the rebellion. German and Russian sympathies, also, are ranged on opposite sides, and all this caused fears that a general war might result. France called on all other nations to preserve neutrality, and Spain warned Italy and Germany to keep hands off.

Day by day the struggle in Spain became bloodier and more ruthless. Summary executions of prisoners were common on both sides and these deaths were probably as numerous as those in battle. The government planes showered bombs on the rebel strongholds, virtually destroying many towns; and the Fascist bombers engaged in desperate fights with loyal warships.

President Roosevelt's Vacation Is Ended

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT ended his 437 mile cruise when his yacht docked at Campobello island, New Brunswick, where he has a summer home.

Mr. Roosevelt remained at Campobello only two days and then took a special train to Quebec, where he visited with Lord Tweedsmuir, governor general of Canada.

Immediately after this meeting, Mr. Roosevelt took train for his summer residence in Hyde Park, N. Y., and there began mapping the plans for his campaign for reelection. Half a dozen leaders of the Democratic party, including National Chairman James A. Farley, were summoned into conference with their chief. The President also obtained from Secretary Wallace and Chester Davis a report on drouth conditions and relief needs.

Smaller Scale Projects in New PWA Program

EMPHASIS is placed on smaller scale projects to be completed speedily, in the third building program of the public works administration, which was opened by the allotment of $22,742,034 by President Roosevelt. It includes 352 projects in 37 states, and the largest of these is a courthouse for New York city to cost the government $4,835,000. The average allotment is only $64,323.

Secretary Ickes, PWA administrator, said that, in addition to 45 per cent donation, PWA will lend $2,142,000 to help communities defray their 55 per cent share of the cost President Roosevelt has ordered that all projects "be commenced by October 1, 1936, reach a peak by the end of the year and be completed by October 1, 1937."

Frank Knox Notified of His Nomination

FACING an enthusiastic crowd that completely filled the big Chicago stadium, Col. Frank Knox received from Senator Steiwer of Oregon the official notification of his nomination for the vice presidency by the Republican party. National Chairman John Hamilton introduced the senator, who spoke briefly but forcefully and with his customary eloeloquence. As Colonel Knox stepped forward to deliver his speech of acceptance he was greeted by a roar of applause that continued for many minutes. His fellow citizens were glad to express their gratification for the honor done him, and the thousands from outside Chicago were no less warm in their appreciation of the candidate. In the streets surrounding the stadium was another vast throng of people who, unable to get into the building, listened to the proceedings as broadcast by a loud-speaker system.

Colonel Knox

Unlike Governor Landon, Colonel Knox devoted much of his address to the alleged failures of the Roosevelt administration which, he said, had the most glorious opportunity in the history of the nation but ignored its responsibility, failed in its job and defaulted in its obligations.

"From the day that it took office," he declared, "it embarked on a series of hysterical experiments on the economic life of a burdened people. At a time when universal co-operation was a necessity it initiated a campaign of abuse and vilification of business men. At a time when the credit of the country should have been strengthened it inaugurated a policy of credit adulteration and currency experiment that demoralized foreign trade and frightened domestic finance. It set up a system of regimentation of industry that reduced production and prevented re-employment. By coercion of congress it forced the passage of reform measures so recklessly drawn that they hamstrung the revival of enterprise and paralyzed the renewal of investment. It installed a regimentation of agriculture that destroyed food and reduced foreign markets and increased the cost of living and multiplied the expense of relief.

"At a time when private industry was struggling desperately for a new start it set up governmental enterprise to compete with private business. At a time when the burden of taxation was already hard to bear it embarked on a policy of squandering public funds and increasing the weight of taxes. At a time when united effort and mutual good-will would have completed recovery it promoted sectional hatred and class strife. At a time when returning business confidence was ending depression it began a campaign to terrorize business and subjugate the banks. At a time when confidence in the character of government was vital it established a spoils system.

"No one can define the New Deal or even describe it. But we know what it means. It means federal control over local business, over local bank credit, over local wages, over local conditions of work. It leads to federal regimentation of the labor, the business, and the home of every American citizen. It leads to price-fixing and production control by federal authority. It leads inevitably to the extinction of the small business man, to the end of free enterprise in America."

Government Crop Report Shows Drouth Damage

THE WEEKLY crop report and weather summary of the Department of Agriculture revealed that the drouth and high temperature were playing havoc with the corn crop in most of the leading producing states. In some sections there will not even be fodder and over a much larger area no grain will be obtained this year. There were good rains, however, in parts of the central and eastern areas and improvement was noted there in both corn and pasturage.

The present drouth in Iowa, the department said, has caused greater damage to corn than that of 1934. The summary reported almost complete destruction of the crop in two southern and two western tiers of counties.

Home-Canned Corn Is a Delicious Treat to Put Away for Future Use

Careful Selection of Kernels Is Necessary When Preserving

In the successful canning of corn much depends upon the careful selection of fresh, juicy corn that has not yet reached the "dough" stage. White corn is usually preferred for canning; however, any variety may be canned.

To test the corn for maturity, stick the fingernail in the kernels. If the milk flows freely the corn is right for canning. After the corn has reached the "dough" stage it is too old for canning.

Corn continues to harden after it is removed from the stalk and the sugar content decreases rapidly; because of this it is important to can the corn as soon as possible after gathering. If the corn is allowed to stand for several hours or overnight, canning is more difficult.

Work Rapidly

Once the canning is begun, work rapidly with the corn. It may be precooked on the cob or first cut from the cob. Many feel that the preferable way of canning is cutting the corn from the cob before precooking. This allows the corn to be packed into the jars while it is boiling hot and this of course aids in processing. In cutting the corn from the cob be careful not to cut too close to the cob s that husks will get into the corn. If a cream corn is desired, only the top of the kernels should be cut off and the lower part of the kernel removed by gently scraping the cob. For a whole grain corn the kernels are cut close to the cob and no scraping is done.

Corn is a starchy food which retards heat penetration and because of this it is important to pack the corn loosely in the jar, filling the jar only to within one inch of the top with the corn, and 1-2 inch of the top with boiling water. This allows a good proportion of liquid to solid material.

Do not allow the jars of corn to stand after they are packed, but get them into the cooker and start processing as soon as possible. Follow a reliable timetable closely. As soon as processing is complete set the jars of corn out of a draft, but where they will cool as rapidly as possible.

By observing the above precautions and closely following the recipe below, corn may be successfully canned.

Corn

Use only absolutely fresh corn that is tender and juicy. Husk, cut from cob, place in pan with just enough boiling water to cover. Precook 3 to 5 minutes. Pack loosely in clean jars to one inch of top with corn, and fill with boiling water to within 1-2 inch of top. Add 1-2 teaspoon salt and 1-2 teaspoon sugar if desired to each quart jar. Wipe glass sealing surface clean, put on lid. Process in pressure cooker, 80 minutes at 10 pounds or in water bath 210 minutes, or in oven 240 minutes at 250 degrees.

Dorance Grange had the misfortune to fracture a bone in his left forearm Monday afternoon when he was playing on the grass at the P W Johnson home and slipped on the grass when running

Dorance fractured this same arm several weeks ago when he slipped off of a truck What bothers Dorance more than having his arm in a sling is that he wonders if his arm will be in condition to conduct hunting this fall

MILKADES NOURISH, REFRESH

The youngsters should come in for their share of one of the chief delights of summer -long, cool drinks in frosted glasses. Refreshing beverages will make heat slink out of the lndscape and irritability and lassitude too, if the drinks have a milk base For milk drinks attractively flavored with fruit juices, nourish as well as refresh

Three large bananas mashed through a sieve, mixed with two tablespoons sugar and a few grains of salt and then whipped into a quart of milk with an egg beater is an example of a nourishing cold drink for a half-dozen of the younger set. A cup of crushed red or black raspberries or juice from three oranges may be substituted for the bananas These mixtures will require more sugar Orange coloring may be added to the "orange milkade." And a few slices of bananas may be floated to add interest.

Grape juice blends nicely with egg-nog Beat two eggs, mix with 2-3 cup grape juice, 4 teaspoons of sugar, salt and 1 cup of milk. Then shake until blended Serve immediately, since the color is not good when the mixture stands. Maple adds a pleasing flavor to a fluffier eggnog Add a few grains of salt to white of four eggs, beat until stiff and add gradually ¼ cup sugar, ½ teaspoon maple flavoring, the egg yolks well beaten and one quart milk Serves four to six Nutritionists suggest that the liquids be chilled until cool, but not ice-cold Ice should be used sparingly, if at all.

Sent to a free dental dispensary by a school nurse, Urias Smith, 15-year-old Omaha Negro, boasted that he would not permit his tooth to be filled, but he was wrong. Three dentists and four nurses finally completed the job.

EAGLE LAKE REMAINS OPEN FOR HUNTING

Many petitions signed by hundreds of hunters and mterested persons in the vicinity of Eagle Lake in Hancock County asked that the Conservation Commission establish that area as a migratory waterfowl refuge. A like number were received asking that the area remain open to hunting All were considered by the Conservation Commission at its recent meeting

The Commission considered the requests at some length and after asking for and receiving the recommendation of the Fish and Game Division, acted to let the lake area remain open to the public for hunting. The decision was based on the Fish and Game Division's explanation which stated that Iowa now has 16 migratory waterfow. refuges and the Federal Government has established 4 in Iowa making a total of 20 Another has been established by the Federal authorities near the Iowa-Minnesota border at Lake Albert Lea Minnesota It was the opinion of the Iowa game authorities that this number is sufficient for Iowa

Another point brought out in the explanation of the game authorities was that if the Federal migratory regulations are the same as in 1935, every lake having more than 200 feet of open water will also act as a refuge, because the regulations prohibited the taking of migratory waterfowl more than 100 feet from existing vegetation Accordingly, Clear Lake, which is only 18 miles from Eagle Lake, would act as a refuge Crystal Lake in Hancock County, which is only a few miles from Eagle lake would also act as a refuge under the existing regulations.

It was further explained that whenever areas the size of Eagle Lake are closed to hunting, the concentration of hunters becomes greater on the remaining open areas and with the small amount of hunting areas in the State, the Commission deemed it best for conservation to continue the lake as a public shooting ground

IOWA PENSION CHECKS AMOUNT TO $393,758

Des Moines —The state old age assistance commission mailed August pension checks totaling $393,758 to 27,073 pensioners

The commission said 2,219 more checks totaling $32,264 will be sent out Aug. 15 These checks are for pensions which expired but were tentatively renewed

This makes a total of 29,292 persons on the pension roll, a decrease of 480 since July 1 which the commission said resulted from deaths and cancellations

The state comprollers office last week transferred $650,000 to the pension fund, completing payment of the $1,000,000, appropriated by the last legislature for pension.

BANKING SYSTEM SHOWS PROGRESS

State Bank Resources Grow More Than Three Billion Dollars in a Year

NATIONAL BANKS GAIN

American Bankers Association Gives Details of Banking Institutions and Notes Stronger Condition

NEW YORK.—Continued improvement in the condition of state chartered banking institutions, with an increase of more than three billion dollars in a year in total resources, is shown in a report just issued by the State Bank Division of the American Bankers Association.

The report was prepared by the division's Committee on State Bank Research from data furnished by state banking departments and parallels data issued by the Comptroller of the Currency for national banks which show similar improvements.

"The combined resources of 10,473 state supervised banks were $35,724,723,000 as of December 31, 1935," the state bank report says. "Total deposits amounted to $30,526,920,000. Total loans and discounts stood at $12,430,404,000 and total investments were $14,170,421,000."

A year previous, tables in the report show, there were 10,644 state supervised banks, with combined resources of $32,680,203,000, total deposits $27,297,959,000, loans and discounts $13,060,033,000 and investments $12,582,325,000.

Classes of Institutions

Of the reporting state banking institutions on December 31, 1935, 82% were commercial banks, the report states, 9% trust companies, almost 9% stock and mutual savings banks and less than 1% were private banks. The report adds:

"The parallel upward movements of deposits and total invested funds of total state supervised banks during the years 1934 and 1935, after declines in these items in 1932 and 1933, are indications of definite steps toward recovery in banking.

"Based on figures assembled for total state supervised banks on resources and liabilities as of December 31, 1931 to 1935, it is noted: (1) that deposits in 1935 rose approximately 12 per cent over the previous year, as compared with an increase of about 9 per cent in 1934 over the year 1933, and declines of 7 per cent and 12 per cent in 1938 and 1932, respectively, from the preceding years of 1932 and 1931; and (2) that total invested funds increased by approximately 2 per cent in 1935 and also in 1934, while they had decreased by 9 per cent in 1933 and by 11 per cent in 1932."

Analysis Shows Stronger Positions

In a survey and analysis of earnings and expenses of state banks doing a commercial business, it is brought out that in a majority of states they have increased their earning ability during 1935. On the basis of data covering 7,928 banks in 42 states, the report says:

"The most significant fact to be pointed out is that new profits of state banks—after deducting charge-offs on loans, investments, etc., and adding recoveries—were shown in 37 of the 42 states which reported in 1935, in comparison with net profits in only 11 of the 35 states reporting in 1934 Measured in terms of dollars per each $100 of invested funds, net profits in 1935 ranged between $2 40 and $ 10 per $100, with 19 states showing profits of $1.00, or over, per $100; while in 1934 net profits did not exceed $1.20 per $100 and only three states showed profits of $1.00, or over."

The report contains voluminous tables showing the resources and liabilities of all classes of state chartered institutions and detailed analyses of earnings and expenses by states and of insured commercial state banks grouped by size of banks

Bankers Help Farmers

The conviction that 4-H Club work lays the foundation for sound citizenship and intelligent farming influenced a New York City bank executive to contribute $500 to the Agricultural Committee of the State Bankers Association, to further 4-H Club activities in the state. "I am convinced that the work is so worthy, and is being so well handled that it should interest those who believe in building sound citizenship, as well as intelligent farming for the future," he said.

Unusual prominence was given this past year to agricultural work by the Tennessee Bankers Association. The Agricultural Committee report reveals hearty cooperation between bankers and extension workers. "Key bankers and county agents have been in closer contact than ever before," it says.

Georgia bankers have given both moral and financial backing to a Marketing Project sponsored by the Extension Service of the College of Agriculture, and activities the past year showed significant results The phases of the Marketing program emphasized in the year's work are· The retail curb market; roadside marketing, miscellaneous marketing (suited to the locality); bartering (exchange of commodities or services with neighbors), standardized canned products for sale prepared in homes or canning centers.

"Two Trains on a Track"

By FLOYD GIBBONS
Famous Headline Hunter

"IF I'D been embarking on an expedition into some unexplored jungle," says George Force of New York city, "I might have been ready for anything. But as it happened, adventure came to me on a trip home from the office. A trip I took six days a week, fifty weeks in the year." Well, George, I've been arguing for a long time that that's the way most adventures happen.

It was on January 27, 1903, and George was on a train headed for home, which was then in a small New Jersey suburban town. It was a funny old train—as we know trains now.

The cars were wooden ones. They were heated by coal stoves, one of which was set in the middle of each car. It was a cold, snowy night. The train was rolling along about twenty miles out of New York, and just beyond the town of Westfield.

At the other side of Westfield, the train stopped. The express was coming through and the little local was switched to another track. The railroad dispatchers intended it to stay there until the express had gone by.

Tragic Train Wreck on Winter Night.

But something went wrong with the signals. The big train—the Royal Blue Line Philadelphia Express—doing sixty miles an hour—was on the wrong track. It was coming straight for the rear-end of the local train on which George was riding, but not a man on either train knew it until it was too late The first George knew of it was when the crash came. It came with a terrible, jarring impact that shook the train from one end to another. Then, as far as George was concerned, the whole world seemed to be coming to an end.

Says George: "I was in the forward part of the third car. The crash, when it came, was so terrific that it pushed our train half a mile along the tracks. The shock of that collision alone killed many people."

But that shock was only the beginning. Jolted half out of his senses, George was dimly conscious of the whole terrible affair. Like a man in a dream he saw the car he was in turn over on its side. As it turned, George went head first through a window, cutting his face, bruising his back. With the whole upper part of his body out of that window, he was dragged along the tracks as the car, lying on its side, still continued to scrape along them.

Express Locomotive Bores Into Wooden Car.

When a thousand things all happen at once, it takes a long time to tell them. Actually, George's whole adventure didn't last more than ten minutes all told. He felt the car turning over almost at the same time as the initial impact. He saw himself going through the window, felt himself being dragged along the rough surface of the roadbed, scarcely a split second after the car had toppled.

That scared him plenty, but the most awesome sight was the one that came just another split second after he fell through the window of that still-moving car.

George was up in the front part of his car. If he hadn't been, he might not have been alive today. For to the rear of the car came a horrible grinding sound. The whole back-end crumpled like matchwood. And into the car—right down its crazily tilted aisle—came the locomotive of the express.

George Describes Scenes of Frightful Horror.

George watched it in a daze of fear as it pushed its steaming head forward. It had gone through two cars already, killing and mashing and maiming their passengers. Now it was coming after George. Would that hot, smoking juggernaut get him? Geoorge held his breath, certain that it was the end, but half way down the car, the engine stopped.

The car was filled with cries and groans. Injured people were everywhere. The car was burning, as were all the other cars in the trains, set afire by the upended coal stoves that heated them.

Says George: "The scenes I witnessed then were indescribable. The car was a twisted, misshapen mass of ruin. Burning ruin, with the locomotive embedded in its midst. Dead, wounded and helpless humans were lying along its entire length. Passengers from the few cars that were not harmed seemed stunned, and it was the less seriously wounded—some of whom had been in the worst of the wreck—who realized that help must be given to the dead and dying and that something must be done about those pinned in flaming cars."

Wreck Cost the Lives of 30 Passengers.

George himself was one of the latter. He couldn't get out alone, and only did with difficulty when three or four men came to help. When at last they pried him loose, he was still in a state of half-consciousness. His clothes, from his neck to his waist, had been torn completely from his body. They led him away through a scene of the most frightful disorder. Moaning, bleeding, scalded victims lay in rows by the side of the track, and every minute rescuers brought out more.

Every passenger in the rear car was killed outright. Few escaped in the next one. The engineer of the express train died a few minutes after the accident. All told, thirty people were killed and scores were injured.

And George—well—every time he thinks of that wreck, and the way that locomotive came crashing right into the car after him, he counts himself pretty lucky not to have been one of those poor devils in the last car.

Washington's Escape Cited

History tells how Washington, a colonel under General Braddock in the French and Indian war of 1775, was one of the few survivors in the ill-fated ambuscade of July 9, but there is a sequel which records the wonder of his escape. Years afterward an aged Indian chief came from a long journey to meet him, saying he had a great wish to see the man who was protected by the Great Spirit, and could not be slain in battle, how in that ambuscade, he had specially singled out Washington, bidding the others to do so also, without any effect, until they were convinced he could not be shot and ceased to aim at him.

Two Kinds of Rabies

There are two kinds of true rabies—first, what is known as dumb rabies and, second, furious or violent rabies. In the first the dog acts as if it has something caught in its throat. Generally behaves abnormally. Lower jaw becomes rigid. Naturally a dog with this type of rabies does little biting. Condition of his lower jaw prevents it. In violent rabies the symptoms are much the same as in the dumb variety, with the evidences of uneasiness or nervousness, and drooling. In violent rabies the dog always snaps at things or people. That is the outstanding difference between the two types.

Childhood
Tugwell's Little Girl
Holland Buys Planes
Rev. Webber Knows

Childhood lasts longer in France than in America and it is real childhood. Boys in their teens, writing letters, call their fathers Cher petit papa, "Dear little papa" — imagine that from an American "prep" school.

Arthur Brisbane

Little French girls play innocently with Toto, their little dog, hardly knowing that such things as francs exist, when much older than Assistant Secretary Tugwell's intelligent young daughter, Marcia, aged twelve, who, in partnership with her friends, Mary Frances Cottrell and Joyce Helmick, organized "a laundry for washing dogs." They advertised: "Small dogs, 30 cents; middle-sized dogs, 35 cents; groomed and washed. Dogs not good-natured must be sent with muzzles, and we cannot wash large dogs."

Too bad that parental severity broke up the dog laundry. It had announced working hours "10 a. m. to 5 p. m. on Saturdays," the studious little girls' only holiday, "all hours after school on other weekdays."

What a good example for government enterprises: the little girls really meant to work to "groom and wash" the dogs, not merely stand around and collect the 30 cents.

Plucky little Holland and her wise queen seem to have decided that the 1914 "war to end all wars" did not finish its job. Holland went through the big war safely, selling butter, cheese, eggs, not disturbed, not making any bad $10,000,000,000 loans.

Now Holland is buying 13 heavy bombing planes in Baltimore, spending $1,500,000 for the 13, and spending many other millions for other killing machinery.

That means work and wages in Baltimore; it may mean poison gas and death for some of Holland's neighbors.

Foreign countries read everything said about them in America; not that foreign countries care what Americans think, or attach importance to American opinion, as such; but America has money, raw products, and governments that are sometimes whimsical, changeable and boyish.

Europe, Asia and Africa watch with equal interest statements of Americans that count and more numerous Americans that float like feathers in the air.

One simple - minded Russian pointed with pride to the statement of a clergyman in our Union Theological seminary.

That gentleman, Rev. Charles C. Webber, has a plan for a better government, not based on the text about rendering unto Caesar that which is Caesar's. The big idea is to take away what is Caesar's.

Eight hundred young people were told by Reverend Webber: "God, who is not content with things as they are, is a revolutionary Being, constantly seeking to make all things new."

Rev. Webber, "recognizing this," about God being a revolutionist, has a plan to help God in his efforts; a plan as simple as A, B, C. Capitalism, he says, must be abolished. Rev. Webber wants a planned and planning social economy in the United States. Under the Charles C. Webber plan, people would own and manage such things as industry and property; no money would be spent for war, and youth would rule.

Those brought up with the old-fashioned idea of God might ask Rev. Webber, respectfully: "If God really is a revolutionary 'constantly seeking to make all things new,' why does He not carry out His will and 'make all things new' every few minutes? Can it be that He needs the help of Rev. Webber? Lenin and Stalin got along without that help."

Also arises this question: With capitalism abolished, who would build the churches, the Union Theological seminaries, and pay salaries to Rev. Webbers for reading the mind of the Divinity?

Dean Swift should have known Rev. Webber when he wrote his tale of a tub.

France calls Paris the "aerial port of Europe," proudly. In America the still prouder title "Chief Air Traffic Port of the Whole World" is claimed by Miami, Los Angeles, San Diego, Chicago, Cleveland, and with a great deal of reason by San Francisco and Oakland, thanks to the magnificent bay, and to the fact that the greatest air line, running from America to Asia, starts from that neighborhood.

STAR DUST
Movie • Radio

★★★By VIRGINIA VALE★★★

IRENE DUNN has just returned from Europe with a lot of interesting information regarding the famous Madame Curie, whom she will portray on the screen.

Most of us have thought of the famous scientist as a solemn sort of person, but Irene has discovered that she most decidedly had a lighter side. For example, she was the best dancer in her village, and loved music.

Incidentally, Irene has drawn another plum out of the motion picture pie. One of the three pictures which she is to do for Paramount is "The Count of Luxembourg." Gladys Swarthout seemed to be all set for it, but, although she is beautiful and has a lovely voice, she is not too good in pictures. Her technique seems to be better suited to opera than to the screen.

Marlene Dietrich finally got off to New York and then to Europe, with 19 trunks (she took an extra room on the train for the trunks, so that they'd be handy whenever she wanted to change), various servants and attendants, and her daughter.

Marlene Dietrich

Interviewed on her arrival in New York, she said all the right things—that American women were the most beautiful in the world, that Garbo was her favorite actress, etc. She was dressed in a sheer black frock, and a tiny hat, trimmed, of course, with feathers.

If you love thrills and automobile racing, be sure to see "Speed," with James Stewart and Wendy Barrie. Young Mr. Stewart is climbing fast, perhaps because he's so natural, perhaps because all of us who go to pictures seem to be getting tired of too-handsome men.

As for Wendy Barrie, she is charming. Incidentally, she's been seen around again with the young millionaire whom rumor had her all set to marry when she landed on these shores.

Warren Hull is both resourceful and sensible. His young sons wanted a swimming pool, but Hull is one movie actor who refuses to have a pool (and what with the cost of the pool and the cost of keeping it filled, who can blame him?)

So he did what fathers all over the land have done; had a tank built, seven by nine, that can be filled easily with the garden hose, and now everybody's happy.

Joan Crawford's favorite records are no longer those made by Bing Crosby. She's switched to operatic recordings, and likes to sing along with the soloist.

And as for Bing—"Pennies from Heaven" is his next picture, and he's doing good work in it. His family is all settled in their new home, his horses are settled at his ranch, he's established as a big attraction on the radio—and how's that for a lad who'd never amount to anything, according to the prophets of not so many years ago?

Auto trailers are becoming more and more popular in the movie colony. Twentieth Century-Fox went in for them heavily a while ago — the Jones family used six to get to the location site of "See America First," and during the making of the location scenes of "Ramona" Loretta Young, Kent Taylor and Director Henry lived in them.

Loretta Young

Somebody had the "Ramona" cast worried by arranging for some peacocks to be used in the picture —not that anyone would come right out and admit being superstitious, of course, but they all recalled the fact that peacocks are supposed to bring bad luck.

So—somebody else just "forgot" to bring the peacocks along.

ODDS AND ENDS . . . Don't blame me if you miss "The Ex-Mrs. Bradford"—it's great . . . Cora Sue Collins has autographs from all the famous folk she's worked with . . . Evelyn Venable recently bought her infant daughter her first bonnet—but the baby won't wear it . . . George O'Brien is working hard on "Daniel Boone" . . . George Raft is going to try his hand at pictures in England . . . Claudette Colbert and Clark Gable did their hitch-hiking scene from "It Happened One Night" at the Actors' benefit show the other night and the audience all but rolled in the aisles . . . Maureen O'Sullivan may marry John Farrow when "Tarzan" is completed . . . The next Quintuplets picture will be "Reunion," with Jean Hersholt again playing a doctor.

Jeffersonian Democrats Band Together

FORTY - THREE Democrats, most of them prominent nationally or locally and representing twenty states, gathered in Detroit to tell one another and the world how much and why they disliked the New Deal. After two days of conferring, they organized themselves as the National Jeffersonian Democrats and named Former Senator James A. Reed of Missouri as their national chairman. They decided to establish headquarters at once in St. Louis and to set up an organization in every state. Then they gave out a 1,500 word declaration or platform in which they declared they "will not support for re-election the candidates of the Philadelphia convention for President and vice president, and we call upon all loyal and sincere Democrats to consider the question of their duty to their country in the approaching election with the same earnestness that has guided our delibrations—joining with us if they feel that our conclusions are sound and our anxiety for the future of our party and our country is justified."

J. A. Reed

The name of Governor Landon was not mentioned in the declaration, but a number of its signers are openly supporting the Republican candidate. Among these are Joseph B. Ely, Col. Henry Breckinridge, John Henry Kirby of Texas and Robert S. Bright of Maryland. However, the avowed prime objective of the Jeffersonians is the defeat of President Roosevelt and the restoration of the Democratic party to its status before the New Dealers captured it. Their declaration is unsparing in its denunciation of Mr. Roosevelt's course and the policies of his administration.

Bar Association Split on New Deal Legislation

WHEN the American Bar association convenes in Boston soon it will receive two widely differing reports from a special committee named to study the effects of New Deal legislation on the rights and liberties of citizens. They were made public in Washington. The majority report, signed by John D. Clark, Cheyenne, Wyo.; Fred H. Davis, Tallahassee, Fla.; George L. Buist, Charleston, S. C., and Charles P. Taft II., Cincinnati, Ohio., "deplored" the action of President Roosevelt in reducing congress to a "rubber stamp" body to carry through his progrem.

"Novel legislative and governmental trends of the New Deal are just as uncertain today as they were two years ago," the report said. "Laws specifically proposed as emergency measures with limited life have been declared by important members of the administration to be the beginning of permanent changes in national policy.

"There has been a continuing conflict between such officials as to whether a new social and economic order is in the making or the old institutions are being perfected so that they may be preserved."

These findings were challenged by Kenneth Wynne, New Haven, Conn.; Fred L. Williams, St. Louis, Mo., and James G. McGowen of Jackson, Miss. In their minority report they said. "If the purpose of the resolution creating the special committee was to get the opinion of the American Bar association regarding legislative trends designed to meet changing economic conditions, the report is superficial. It does not deal with the problem but concerns itself with a short range attack on surface trivialities."

Congressman Zioncheck Commits Suicide

MARION A. ZIONCHECK brought to an end in characteristic manner his checkered career and his life. He leaped to his death from a window of his office in Seattle shortly after he had filed for re-nomination to the congressional seat he had held for two terms. His friends attributed the suicide to worry over a psychiatrist's advice that he take a long rest from politics. His trouble had been diagnosed as dementia praecox.

American Track Team Victor in Olympics

EIGHT days of track competition that brought out many record-breaking performances showed that the American team was unbeatable in the matter of total points. These Yankee athletes piled up a total of 203 points. Finland was second with 80 1-4, Germany third with 69 3-4 and Japan fourth with 51 13-22. Jesse Owens, the marvelous colored lad from Ohio State university, captured four gold medals for firsts in the 100 meter and 200 meter runs and the broad jump and for pacing the winning American quartet in the 400 meter relay. The decathlon was won by Glenn Morris of Denver.

Japan captured the most highly prized Olympic championship when Kitei Son, young Corean student, won the marathon race over a very tough course and in the record time of 2 hours 29 minutes 19.2 seconds. The distance was 26 miles and 385 yards.

Among the women contestants Helen Stephens of Missouri distinguished herself by breaking the world record in two heats of the 100-meter dash.

Commerce Department on Recovery and Public Debt

SECRETARY OF COMMERCE ROPER'S department has just put out a "world economic review" for 1935 which contains many interesting statements. It says, for instance, that future business prospects are conditioned in part upon the possibility of narrowing the gap between government expenditures and receipts. It asserted that "the government deficit springs from the root of unemployment, which is still the major problem confronting the country.

A. P. Sloan

As to "the part played in the recovery to date by the heavy government expenditures," the report said:

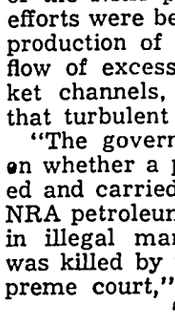
"This question is not easily answered, but it is certain that such outlays have had an influence in many directions — for example, on retail sales, on farm income, on the growth of bank deposits and on the prevailing level of interest rates."

The latter statements may well be compared with the report of Alfred P. Sloan, president of General Motors, to the stockholders. Business recovery throughout the world — in which the United States has participated — is being generated by a combination of various factors, Mr. Sloan explains. In this country the automobile industry has been helped, he says, by principal influences. Only one of these, he points out, has its roots in the New Deal financial schemes and he finds that particular influence a bad one because it creates a temporary fool's paradise in which sales and earnings are ballooned by extraordinary government expenditures.

Asserting that political extravagance has created a highly undesirable and artificial stimulus, Mr. Sloan urges that such spending be halted before it is too late to stave off disaster.

Oil Men and Companies Accused of Conspiracy

CHARGED by the government with conspiracy to violate the anti-trust law by combining to dominate the purchasing of oil in the Texas, Louisiana and Oklahoma fields and to fix prices of gasoline in the Middle West, 58 persons, 23 petroleum concerns and three publishing companies were indicted by a federal grand jury in Madison, Wis. Among the prominent defendants are Edward G. Seubert of Chicago, president of the Standard Oil Company of Indiana; Henry M. Dawes of Evanston, Ill., president of the Pure Oil company, and many officials of Standard Oil, Pure Oil, Deep Rock, Socony-Vacuum and various other oil concerns and their subsidiaries. Also in the list are Warren C. Platt of Cleveland, publisher of the National Petroleum News and Platt's Oilgram; his two publications and the Chicago Journal of Commerce.



H. M. Dawes

The indictment charged that the defendant oil companies formed pools in the east Texas and mid-continent fields for the purpose of purchasing gasoline at artificially high prices from independent producers, and in furtherance of such a scheme were members of associations which included the independents. Further it was charged that independent refiners to aid the plan, had curtailed their production of gasoline.

This, said Mr. Platt, is exactly what the oil companies did with the approval of Secretary of the Interior Harold L. Ickes, administrator of the NRA petroleum code, when efforts were being made to limit the production of gasoline, prevent the flow of excess quota oil into market channels, and raise prices in that turbulent industry.

"The government's charge turns on whether a practice legally started and carried on under the recent NRA petroleum code was continued in illegal manner after the NRA was killed by the United States Supreme court," Mr. Platt said.

Two American Authors Called by Death

LINCOLN STEFFENS, long prominent as a journalist, writer and lecturer, died at Carmel, Calif., at the age of seventy. He was creator of the so-called muck-raking school of journalism and in many magazine articles he exposed the corruption in municipal politics.

Another well known American writer, Arthur B. Reeve, passed away at his home in Trenton, N. J. He gained fame by his crime and mystery stories.

President Resents Charge of Politics in Relief

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT was visibly aroused by Republican charges that the New Dealers were seeking to reap political profit from the drouth conditions. At his press conference he broke with the usual rule by permitting himself to be directly quoted as saying:

"It is a great disservice to the proper administration of any government to link up human misery with partisan politics."

The President announced that he would hold a series of regional conferences with governors of states in the drouth area, and naturally Governor Landon, his Republican opponent, will be among those he will meet. It was believed they would come together about Labor day in Des Moines, with the governors of Iowa, Nebraska, Oklahoma and Missouri. Mr. Landon said he would accept the President's invitation to such a conference.

Senator Keyes, New Hampshire, to Retire From Office

SENATOR HENRY W. KEYES of New Hampshire has announced that he is not a candidate for re-election by the Republicans, prefering "to retire from active participation in public affairs." The Republicans therefore will choose between former Senator George H. Moses and Gov. H. Styles Bridges, both of whom have announced their candidacy for the nomination.

Kansas Republicans renominated Senator Arthur Capper, and the Democrats picked Omar Ketchum of Topeka. In Kentucky the Democrats renominated Senator M. M. Logan, whose Republican opponent in November will be Robert H. Lucas.

Ten "Rebel" Unions Are Suspended From A. F. of L.

UNLESS John L. Lewis and his associates in the Committee for Industrial Organization repent and cease their "rebellious" activities before September 5, the ten unions they head will be under suspension from the American Federation of Labor. Such was the verdict of the federation's executive council which passed on the charges of John P. Frey, president of the metal trades division, that the CIO was "fomenting insurrection and rebellion." David Dubinsky, head of the garment workers, cast the only vote against the suspension order.

J. P. Frey

Lewis having definitely set himself against any peace overtures, it appeared that the suspension certainly would be put into effect. The next move will be up to the Tampa convention in the fall, which will be asked to vote the expulsion of the refractory unions.

The ten unions accused by Mr. Frey and found guilty are.

United Mine Workers.

Amalgamated Clothing Workers, Sidney Hillman, president.

Oil Field, Gas Well, and Refinery Workers, Harvey Fremming president.

Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers, Thomas H. Brown, president.

Ladies' Garment Workers, David Dubinsky, president.

Textile Workers, Thomas F. Mc Mahon, president.

Flat Glass Workers, Glen McCabe, president.

Iron, Steel, and Tin Workers, M. F. Tighe, president.

Automobile Workers, Homer Martin, president.

Rubber Workers, S. H. Dalrymple, president.

Lewis characterized the council's action as one of "incredible and crass stupidity" and said that it was "dictated by personal selfishness and frantic fear."

Fierce Fighting in the Spanish Civil War

DESPERATE fighting for possession of the passes in the Guadarrama mountains north of Madrid was going on between the government forces and the rebel troops. Loyalist soldiers were hurried to that region, and Madrid claimed some victories. However, the Fascists on the northern side of the range were said to be within sight of the capital and in position for a vigorous advance.

The rebels scored in the south by landing 2,000 Moroccan troops from Ceuta after a lively sea and air fight in which two loyalist warships were driven off. The loyalists were also reported to have met defeat near Avila, losing 600 men and some tanks and trucks.

On the twentieth day of the rebellion the government announced it had captured the provinces of Catalonia, Valencia, Murcia, Malaga, Ciudad Real, Guadalajara, Badajoz and the northern resort city of San Sebastian.

FLOYD GIBBONS ADVENTURERS' CLUB

Hello Everybody

"The Man in the Rafters"

By FLOYD GIBBONS

THIS is the story of John Schindler of West Orange, N. J., and how he learned to be afraid of a pistol.

That was a funny thing about John. He says he had always been afraid of things like fists, spiders and women, but a loaded revolver sticking in his face wouldn't even make him bat an eyelash. Maybe it was a good thing, too, for John was a detective, and every once in a while somebody DID stick a revolver in his face.

That happened to him once in the summer of 1922, down in a resort town on the Jersey coast. The superintendent of an estate there was suspected of robbing his employer with a sort of systematic thievery. John had been hired to get the goods on him, and was working as second chauffeur while he poked and prowled around gathering his evidence. He just about had the case sewed up when he met the superintendent on the grounds one dark night. The super had a revolver out, was pointing it at him.

And what did John do? He walked over to the super and ripped the gun right out of his hand. The super started to tell John that he'd mistaken HIM for a thief, but John just snorted, threw the gun on the ground, turned his back and walked away.

A spider would he scared him stiff. He'd have run like a turkey from a woman. But shootin' irons just didn't impress him.

That's what John THOUGHT. But he wasn't through with that case yet. He was due to be plenty scared before it was all over. And by a gun, too.

Lunatic Menaces John With Revolver.

It happened the next day, abut two o'clock in the afternoon. "I was entering the garage to go to my room," he says, "when I was greeted by the most blood-curdling laugh I ever heard in my life. I looked about the garage. There was no one in sight. Finally, I looked up!"

Then John saw him! Three days before, the superintendent's son had been brought home from the state insane asylum. Now he was sprawled atop a crossbeam of the garage, leering down at John with a mad light in his eyes. And in his hand he had a revolver!

"I'd been thinking guns didn't scare me," says John, "but I'd never figured on bumping into one in the hands of a madman. It was the worst experience I ever had in my life. My knees wanted to shake, but I didn't dare let them. I had to keep my head and keep on talking. And talk I did, while he toyed with me like a cat plays with a mouse."

John Flatters the Ego of Homicidal Maniac.

For a full half hour John talked and stalled for time. "First," he says, "he told me he was going to kill me but had a few things he wanted to tell me first. He said I had his father suffering the tortures of hell through my butting into his business, and now he wanted to see me squirm.

He said he was going to make me suffer as long as possible before putting me out of my misery. Then he added that, of course, if anyone came into the garage that would upset his plans he'd have to shoot me before they could interfere. All I could do was stand there and play up to his ego while, at the same time, I prayed no one would come near the garage."

John played up to that insane lad until he thought he'd crack from the strain. He yessed him to death—admitted he had the upper hand and could control the show. He agreed that it was up to him whether he killed him then or waited until he was doggone good and ready, and did everything he could think of to make the maniac feel he was a great fellow. And the crazy boy, all swelled up with conceit, ate it up as fast as John could dish it out to him.

Gullible Crazy Man Helps in Phantom Search.

Meanwhile, all John could do was stall along and hope that something would break in his favor. On the other hand, each moment of delay meant that someone might come into the garage and startle the mad boy into pressing the trigger. John had to think fast if he ever expected to get out of that spot alive.

Finally, he began coaxing the mad boy to come down off his perch on the cross-beam. He told him he had all the evidence against his father written down and hidden in his room, and that, before the young lad killed him, he ought to get those papers and destroy them. "He agreed to that," says John, "and thought he was more clever than ever. He brought up in the rear and kept me covered as we went up the stairs to my room."

Once in the room, though, John began looking around in places where he knew doggone well there were no papers, mumbling, as he says John, "I asked him in an offhand way if they could be on the table next to where he was standing. He fell for it—started looking through the papers on the table. That was my only chance and I took it!"

John Crowns Madman With His Own Revolver.

John says his hands got to that table in just nothing flat. Then the battle was on. John says he was never much at fighting, but he fought for his life that day. He had a struggle to get the gun away from the lad, and another one to keep him from getting it back again.

He finally settled that by socking him over the head with the revolver, and maybe, after remembering that terrible half hour of fear and flattery he had been subjected to, he socked a little harder than usual. Anyway, the lad went out—cold. John didn't have any more trouble with him after that.

But nowadays, John doesn't go up against any more birds with guns, unless said birds can furnish him with convincing proof that they're reasonably sane.

Scandinavian Grouse

The Scandinavian grouse, or capercailzie, sometimes called the wood cock in Scotland, is considered the finest game bird on the European continent. It is the largest member of the grouse family found in the world and in size ranks second only to the wild turkey. In the Scandinavian countries it is considered a rare table bird and is generally served on festive occasions. The bird is not highly colored but rather drab in plumage. The head and neck are dull black, the eye feathers red; the breast and lower part of neck a dark blue green metallic. The male outweighs the female and frequently obtains from 15 to 20 pounds. Some weigh as much as 25 pounds

The Salton Sea

The Salton sea or sink, a depression 280 feet below sea level, is located in the desert in the extreme southern part of California. It is one of the numerous salt lakes or lake beds in that part of the country, but it has had a more unusual history than most of them. Its salty sands usually absorb all the waters fed it by a few small creeks, but there are periods when they do not. In 1891 it became a lake, which soon dried up. The lake began to form again in 1893. In 1905 some of the waters of the Colorado river were diverted into it, as apparently they had been in the past, and it rose to its fullest size. In July, 1907, the break in the river was closed and the sea again became a desert.

Before its irrigation empire was ...ven dreamed of and while its ...ineral kingdom was still unde-...veloped, Denver's location was of ...ittle value, but young Denver, de-...spite surveys, clung stubbornly to ...he belief that in some way the ...transcontinental railway, when it ...ame, could be pushed through the ...mountains west of the city. When, ...nstead, the lines of steel were ex-...tended through Cheyenne, a hun-...dred miles to the north, Denverites ...put aside their disappointment and ...quickly raised the capital to build ...a connecting line to the new high-...way

With this rail contact with the ...eastern settlements established and ...with the steady growth of mining ...in the mountains, Denver drew to ...herself in a few years direct lines ...of railroad from the east. Now ...these highways of steel radiate ...north and south and east from ...Denver like the ribs of a fan.

A result of this railway conver-...gence on Denver has been to make ...the city one of the country's lead-...ing livestock markets

Never Lost Dream

While the transcontinental rail-...ways went their busy ways north ...and south of Denver, the city never ...lost its dream of a line straight ...west through the mountains.

Greatest and most tireless of the ...dreamers was David H. Moffat, ...who visioned a six-mile tunnel ...through the Continental Divide un-...der James Peak. He not only ...dreamed, but worked, and spent ...his fortune on the project. He did ...not live to see his plan realized, ...but on July 7, 1927, the Moffat tun-...nel was holed through. Now a ...standard-gauge railway operates ...double tracks through it into Mid-...dle Park, opening up a new moun-...tain realm to Denver.

You sense Denver's most aston-...ishing physical achievement only ...when you let your imagination ...wander back seventy years. It is ...hard to believe that barely three-...score and ten years ago this great ...city, with its hundreds of miles of ...streets, lined now with fine, tower-...ing shade trees, was raw prairie. ...Not a tree was in sight; only a ...level plain covered with sparse ...grass, dry and brown through most ...of the year.

As the outlander drives about ...Denver he is struck by the beauti-...ful lawns There are no excep-...tions. Whether he views the grass ...plot of a humble cottage or the ...park of a near-palace, the lawns ...are perfect.

The price of the beautiful lawns ...is much moisture. At certain hours each day in the summer a virtual barrage of water is laid down over the 1,600 acres of lawns in the city's parks. So frequent are these drenchings that in summer the watering hose is not removed night or day from the hydrants. Driving through the parks in late afternoon, you see orderly piles of hose, as regularly spaced as the trees of an orchard, each like a coiled serpent on sentry duty, guarding its allotted plot.

Use Water Lavishly

Knowing that this is a dry country and that water is precious, you ask one of the officials of the water board about the heavy use of water in the city and run into a surprising paradox.

"It is very important that we use water lavishly today," he tells you, "in order that our grandchildren shall have enough for their vital needs. Visiting water-works experts think we are crazy when we make that statement, but it is literally true

"This is an irrigation country. Municipalities, as well as individuals, must follow the laws worked out under irrigation conditions in getting their water supplies Once you got hold of a flow of water, if you don't use it you forfeit it to some one who will. We are looking forward to a city of half a million or more by 1950. That's why we want to keep every drop of Denver's annual water supply busy and to increase the supply in all possible ways."

One way in which Den...er plans to increase its water supply constitutes an engineering romance. When the Moffat tunnel was dug, an eight-foot-square pilot tunnel was carried through the Continental Divide beside the large railway bore. Denver leased this small tunnel, and plans to bring through the towering mountain range hundreds of millions of gallons of water that now flow into the Pacific ocean.

In education Denver's fame is great. Educators from the two hemispheres have beaten a path to this far-away city at the base of the Rockies to study its scheme of teachers' salaries, its indefatigable efforts to keep the subject-matter which it teaches abreast of all worthwhile developments, and even its school architecture

The "Denver Plan" for teachers' salaries has been adopted by many municipalities

A Practical School

Another famous part of the Denver educational system that draws educators from afar is its Opportunity school. From 8.30 o'clock in the morning until 10 at night this practical school is open alike to young people and old In it elderly men and women, denied the education they wished in youth, receive high school instruction; men displaced in one occupation may learn another; and young men and women may be trained in practical arts, from barbering to bricklaying, and from cooking to etching

Most of Colorado's institutions of higher education are naturally concentrated in and near Denver. In the city is the University of Denver, founded, when the community was little more than a village, by Colorado's territorial governor, John Evans, the same John Evans who previously had founded Northwestern university, Illinois.

Thirty miles to the northwest, at Boulder, is the University of Colorado. So attractive are the mountains that cast their shadows on the campus and beckon for week-end rambles that the University of Colorado is as busy in summer as in winter.

Fifteen miles west of Denver, at Golden, is the Colorado School of Mines Growing up in the edge of an important mining region, the institution is one of the outstanding mining schools of the country. In it in 1926 was established the first course in geophysics in American colleges. Graduates of this latest course in mining lore fare forth with dynamite and radio sets, electro-magnets, torsion balances, and other devices of modern magic to map rock strata lying hundreds and thousands of feet beneath the surface of the ground.

Choses Vues
Furs, Conscience-Proof
Caterpillars and Weeds
Wise Generosity

An able Frenchman, long since dead, wrote about choses vues—"things seen."

Arthur Brisbane

There are still many things to see and to hear, although there is nobody to write about them as that old Frenchman wrote.

At the head of the London Times' "personal column," some one pays to print this impressive extract from the Psalms:

"Seek the Lord, and His strength; seek His face evermore. Remember his marvelous works that He hath done; His wonders, and the judgments of His mouth."

You spend a moment wondering what kind of English man or woman, strong in faith, decided to put that text before statesmen that today seek the "face" of Hitler, Mussolini, Stalin, but forget the greater power of the Creator of those gentlemen.

After that, you read in the same Times this advertisement:

"Furs humanely obtained that can be worn with a clean conscience—full particulars from Maj. C. Van Der Byl, Wappenham, Towcester."

This being an ingenious and doubtless quite sincere appeal to the tender-hearted Englishwoman who does not like to think that the fur around her neck once belonged to an animal that suffered for days and perhaps weeks tortured in a trap.

Possibly the best way to "obtain furs humanely obtained that can be worn with a clear conscience" is to buy and wear some of the innumerable furs, from rugged bears to silky chinchilla, made from the skins of rabbits that are nourished in little hutches in the suburbs of Los Angeles, and fed with "rabbit hay," tender young alfalfa, grown on the Mojave desert, a good deal of it on a ranch owned and operated by this writer.

When you buy furs, no matter what kind, with a rabbit skin foundation, you may be sure that the animal suffered very little, if at all, and when you buy that fur you also buy honest American alfalfa, which is a vegetarian product.

F. C. Cobb wrote from the Boy Scout reservation at Allaire, N. J.: "The last four week-ends have ben spent by our scouts collecting tent caterpillar egg clusters from wild cherry and apple trees along the highways of Monmouth and Ocean counties. Many thousands of egg clusters, each containing on the average 250 eggs, have been destroyed."

No better work could be done by scouts and other boys. It is far better exercise than perfunctory "hikes," often exhausting for smaller boys.

The fathers of the boys, also in need of exercise, can be useful mowing weeds along highways, excellent work for the lungs and for reducing the waist.

Edward S. Harkness, generous young New York financier, gave to Lawrenceville School for Boys a sum that will make possible important new building, plus rebuilding and a more extensive system of small-group instruction, with more teachers.

---

Mr. Harkness, who does not like publicity, refused to make public the amount of his gift of Lawrenceville, but he gave $7,000,000 to Exeter academy, $13,000,000 each to Yale and Harvard, to finance their housing systems. That gives some idea of the size of his gifts.

---

Some Americans will agree that it is a good thing to have men of unusual ability accumulate wealth wisely.

Old-fashioned Americans would rather encourage such gifts and praise the givers than inculcate the notion that anybody with brains enough to accumulate wealth in this country of opportunity is probably a thief and ought to be in jail.

Mussolini knows how a dictator can keep his hold on the people. He establishes 2,000 government camps where half a million poor children enjoy free vacations at sea and mountain resorts. For nine years Mussolini has carried on this work.

---

In Europe, English, French, German, Italian or Czechoslovakian will believe anything you say about American crime, and that is hardly surprising.

The heading "Chicago Politician Dies Under Hail of Racketeers' Bullets" surprises nobody. There might be mild surprise if the heading read, "Chicago Politician Does NOT Die Under Hail of Racketeers' Bullets."

A Fair Hit

Rule 37 of the Official Rules of Baseball reads:—"A fair hit is a legally batted ball that settles on fair ground between home and first base, or between home and third base, or that is on or over fair ground when bounding to the outfield past first base or third base, or that first falls on fair territory on or beyond first base or third base, or that while on or over fair ground touches the person of the umpire or a player. A fair fly must be judged according to the relative position of the ball and the foul line and not as to whether the fielder is on fair or foul ground at the time he touches the ball."

Franklin's Son

Benjamin Franklin had a son William, who lived from 1731 to 1813, and who was the last royal governor of New Jersey. William was appointed governor in 1762, became a Tory in the Revolution, and was held in prison during part of the war. After independence had been established he moved to England, and lived there the remainder of his life. Benjamin Franklin's only other child was a daughter, Sarah.

Venetian Life

On returning from Venice, where he had been consul for four years, William Dean Howells met a Boston publisher, with whom he frequently played shuffleboard or strolled the liner's decks.

One day Howells remarked that he was bringing over a manuscript on Venetian life.

Jokingly the publisher remarked that his firm would bring it out. Without a moment's hesitation the manuscript was turned over to him. . . It was published in 1866 under the title of "Venetian Life."

It may well be said that this was the start of Howells' successful literary career.

FUTURE OF THE IOWA SMALL TOWN

What is the future of the Iowa small town?

Is it to pass entirely out of existence, or dies it have a permanent place in our economic future?

Many would answer these questions by saying that the small town is doomed. A study of any Iowa county will show the ghost remains of many an earlier prosperous small town, and it will show that several of its present small town are on the down grade.

Everyone admits that the automobile has wrought the most significant change in American economic and social life since the invention of the steam engine. All America is on wheels. Whereas a trip to the county seat a few years ago was a breath-taking adventure to be prepared for days in advance, now a trip of a hundred or more miles is a mere evening's jaunt to be undertaken on the spur of the moment.

Like it or not, the "horse and buggy days" are gone, never to return. With the disappearance of the horse and buggy will the small town likewise disappear?

In the summer of 1934, the Commitee on Business and Industry of the Iowa State Planning Board undertook to study the retail trading habits of both rural and urban folk. In 89 of our 99 counties enumerators were sent up and down the country roads asking farmers both where they bought their goods and sold their produce. The same sort of procedure was followed in the Iowa towns of 5,000 or less.

The farmers was asked where he bought such goods as groceries, drugs and medicines, lumber and cement, women's clothing, men's suits, men's and women's shoes, overalls and farm machinery.

In town, the same list of goods was asked about, subsituting furniture for farm machinery and kitchen utensils for lumber and cement.

Both groups were likewise asked certain questions about their banking habits and preferences. The farmer was asked where he sold his hogs, grain, eggs, poultry and cream.

The tabulations of the answers to the hundreds of rural and smalltown interviews enabled the Committee on Business and Industry to make certain definite conclusions.

The small town as a general institution is in no sense doomed to disappearance. It continues to have a very important place in our social and economic life, though of course the automobile has changed it very markedly from the small town of forty years ago.

First, let us see what the small town has lost. With minor exceptions it is no longer the shopping center for either near by rural folk or its own inhabitants for such things as are classed as shopping goods. The survey showed that for such things as clothing and shoes a larger nearby town ordinarily controlled most of the trade of the small town and surrounding country.

In fact, the fifteen largest Iowa towns control approximately 40 percent of the open country trading in these commodities (this refers to square mileage, not to population density).

While the general store may still continue for years to come, it seems reasonable to conclude that the quantity of sales of things where styles and selection are important will ever be on the decline. The radio and the automobile have made the rural people of Iowa as style concious as are the people of the larger cities.

The future of the small town lies in its continued catering to what may be called the "service station" aspects of trading. Almost every one of the 800 incorporated communities of Iowa controls its own inhabitants and the farmers of the surrounding countryside for purchases of such things as groceries, drugs and medicines, and similar convenience goods. It likewise plays a part equal to the largest Iowa community in the sale of lumber and cement.

Apparently, things which are frequently purchased, such as groceries, will continue to be bought indefinitely in the nearest town. Bulky commodities, such as lumber and cement, will likewise be purchased in the nearest town because of the mounting cost of transportation with increasing distance.

The returns from the open country on the two commodities, overalls and farm machinery, show the small town to be less secure in these semi- convenience goods. Overalls can be purchased at the same time clothing is bought, and therefore often are not bought in the small town.

Whether farm machinery is bought locally or in an adjacent large town depends on several factors, the most important of which is the service facilities of the seller. Since an enterprising dealer in even the smallest Iowa hamlet can develop a high class service organization, the small town has a definite place in this kind of business.

Study of a map for Iowa showing the size of open country trading areas for farm machinery reveals a surprising number of small towns possessing an impressive trading area. In short, the sucess of a small town in this business depends essentially upon the dealer.

Where do the inhabitants of these small towns trade? Their trading habits are very similar to those of the rural folk. They buy goods as groceries, drugs and kitchen utensils at home. The smaller the home town, the greater will be their out-of-town trade in shopping goods.

So far, our story has been mainly concerned with the economic aspect of the small town. Admittedly, however, any town is more than just a place in which to buy goods. It is a place where one may transact his banking business, a place where one may go to while away his leisure hours, and a place where children as well as adults may be educated.

The Committee on Business and Industry has, therefore, conducted an additional survey to inquire into these non-economic aspects of community life. While this survey has not as yet been finally tabulated it shows a very definite place for the small town in many of these activities. Its schools its athletics, its band concerts, its women's clubs, and its lodges are live drawing cards.

Such institutions as these make the town's inhabitants and the farmers of the surrounding countyside feel that they are definitely a part of that community. While a visit to a nearby town may be necessary and even enjoyable, it nevertheless does not give the visitor the feeling that this is his home town.

What has been said cannot be taken as a brief by which to defend every town and hamlet found across Iowa. Many of them are on the way out, and nothing can be done by either their inhabitants or outside agencies to prevent their ultimate decadence and disappearance.

But for hundreds of Iowa towns, there is a very definite place. Except for those few places that are too closely located to nearby larger towns, the small town should not only hold its own, but improve and grow with the coming years. —Iowa Planning News.

ORIGIN OF ODD PRICES

We are so accustomed to articles in stores priced at 98 cents, $1.49 and other odd-penny amounts that few persons give any thought to what was once considered a freakish idea in price-making.

But G. H. Cilley, a well-known store advertising manager, tells in a recent article that the custom arose from the solution of a very practical problem by a shrewd merchant.

When Captain Roland H. Macy became tired of sailing the briny deep as a sea captain and started a store in New York, there were no cash registers or other means for checking up his clerks. Money received was put in an old fashioned cash drawer which made no records, and the practice of "knocking down," an euphemism for plain stealing by clerks, was quite prevalent.

Macy changed all prices to odd-cents amounts, established cashiers to make the required change, and kept a close watch on the cashiers. His advertisements of these odd prices seemed to strike the public eye favorably and he got a great response. What was at first only an expedient to keep from being robbed developed into a potent psychological appeal to his customers.

Thus the odd-price has survived many years after the original reason for its adoption ceased to exist.

The largest carillon in the world is in the tower of the four million dollar Riverside church in New York It has 72 bells with a range of six octaves, the largest bell weighing 20 tons.

The carillon tower is high, into which the bells hoisted by electricity, using cables.

Freight trains nowadays act like express specials. New freight schedules are so fast, I sometimes wonder if everything has to be delivered day before yesterday.

Many of our passenger trains are running faster schedules, too. Well, one thing is sure. We make faster runs, but the first railroad commandment is still "Safety First." That's one rule they won't change.

Western railroads and allied industries provided jobs for 750,000 workers last year. Some of them live in our town. Good neighbors.

Passenger fares are now the lowest in history with substantial reductions on round trips. And no more surcharge for riding in sleeping cars.

This new Free pick-up-and-delivery of less than carload freight—I heard some traveling salesmen talking about it on the train yesterday. They said it saves shippers a lot of money and centers all responsibility on the railroad. The railroad picks up the freight at shipper's door and delivers to receiver's door. Of course, local delivery men get the haul from door-to-car and car-to-door at both ends. The railroad handles the whole transaction.

When railroads are busy, I notice towns along the railroad are prosperous. The merchants put more ads in the newspapers.

We are proud of railroad achievements, appreciate the public's good will and increased patronage, and pledge continued progress.

BIRDS AS PROTECTORS

Although some varieties of birds are considered a great nuisance by farmers and others, it is doubtful that any of these feathered tribes are more destructive than useful

Birds are the natural enemies of insects and insects are the greatest enemies of mankind Scientists have declared that without continued research and employment of improved means of combating insect pests they would overrun the world and desroy all other life, including man

The rapidity with which certain insects multiply is beyond the imagination For example, a pair of pucerons, a species of flea, will in a year produce more than 441 quadrillion young One small bird such as a tomtit, will destroy about 1,500 of these in a day; a partridge will eat 30,000 white grubs in a year Various birds have their favorite insects upon which they prey, but all eat practically any insect which crosses their path

With this ever present menace of insects to combat, we can hardly have too many birds Not only out of humane sentiment, but as an actual protection to civilization, the birds should be spared.

A WASTEFUL POLICY

In the first of a series of articles just released for publication by the Farmers' Independence Council of America, attention is called to the tragic waste of public funds now going on in connection with vast irrigation projects in several far western states.

It is stated that since March 1933, funds aggrgating 2,300 million dollars have been allocated for these projects, designed to bring into fertility some 3 million acres of arid land During the same period approximately 1,800 million dollars have been spent for crop destruction, acreage curtailment, slaughter of livestock and other means for reducing farm production

Thus it may be seen that billions are being spent by the government for diametrically opposite purposes to bring arid land into productivity on one hand, while paying to keep good land idle on the other

Official figures from the Department of Agriculture show that in the very states where most of these irrigation projects are located less than 60 percent of the tillable land now available was under construction in 1934 Yet it is planned to provide more land at an irrigation cost running as high as $600 an acre

The inconsistency, absurdity and wastefulness of such a policy should be evident to every thinking person. No wonder our national debt and its consequent tax burden have reached such alarming proportions

First Ban on Sports

Excavations in progress at Pompeii may reveal the first sports ground ever recorded to be disqualified because of disorderliness by the spectators. Men working under the direction of Professor Majuri, curator of the excavations, have brought to light a wall which is believed to form part of the ground in which teams from Pompeii and Nocera staged an athletic contest in 79 A. D.

History records that hundreds of Nocerans went to Pompeii to see the match. While the result was still undecided a decision of the referee was challenged, and Pompeiian and Noceran spectators came to blows. The matter was referred to the emperor, Nero, who disqualified the Pompeiian grounds for ten years. —Montreal Herald.

The things pro- therefore, may be said to be rmanent value and to that ex- represent a veering by the dent to the theory which Sec- Ickes of the Department of or always has held, namely, f federal funds are expended should be used in the construc- nd maintenance of permanent ovements.

hough the general idea of this experiment in relief, new to the New Deal, was practically forced upon the President by the necessity of present relief mess, it neverthe- represents a return to a method regarded by many students of problem as the only way in h relief funds can be properly lled. It places back in the hands ocal communities the task of ng after their own destitute and ity cases. The federal govern- t contributes a share of the s, of course, but it does not boss job as has been the practice un- Harry Hopkins and his Works gress Administration further the requirements that relief be employed.

stated above, the plan now on constitutes the very heart of Republican proposal for han- federal relief. The Republi- platform calls for "federal ds in aid to the states and ter- ries while the need exists upon pliance with these conditions: a proportion of the total relief den to be provided from the rev- es of states and local govern- ts; all engaged in relief admin- ation to be selected on the basis merit and fitness; adequate pro- ons to be made for the encour- ment of those persons who are ng to become self-supporting."

hear much discussion around shington that the President's ex- iment meets the Republican gram in every way except as the second provision which re- s to the selection of the adminis- tive personnel "upon the basis merit and fitness." There are ny who believe Mr. Roosevelt reached the conclusion that re is considerable merit in the tention that unless steps are en to get relief of the unem- yed back into the local com- unities, it will become an unwork- e monster, a Frankenstein. On the other hand, some of the er critics of the Roosevelt ad- nistration are contending that . Roosevelt seeks to try out the publican proposal in this manner order to demonstrate that it is workable. They point also to the ission of the second provision, et mentioned, and declare that e President will use political pat- nage rather than merit as the eans of creating supervision.

While the new method has not en made fully operative so that anyone can see it in full detail, the restriction which Mr. Roosevelt has id down that only relief labor all be used is looked upon as pro- ding a means of dodging complete eration of the plan. It is to be ed that the Republican plank does not limit the workers wholly to relief. In making such a restriction as the President has done, it is held in some quarters that there will not be too many communities able to take advantage of the fresh federal funds. The reason for this is that particularly in the smaller communities there is not a great amount of skilled labor. This comparatively small proportion of skilled labor, comparatively small when measured against the amount of common labor, or unskilled labor, available makes it impossible in a good many instances for the smaller communities to obtain money.

The situation is simply this: in the construction of sewage and water systems and most other construction jobs, there is more skilled labor required than will be available in the communities where these public works are to be undertaken. Further, with the pick up in industry, however small it may yet be, the skilled artisan has more chances to get jobs than has the common laborer. In addition, I think it can be fairly said that a skilled worker is of the type to be among the last to go on relief rolls. In any event, he will not go on the relief rolls until there is no other alternative. He is able to earn a much higher rate of pay than is available to him as a relief dole and naturally is not content to remain on the relief rolls longer than is absolutely necessary.

In this direction then, trouble may lie. Possibly some communities will be guilty of seeking to induce skilled workers to go on relief rolls for a sufficient length of time to enable them to carry out an agreement to employ only relief labor. This is a regrettable possibility but it is a very real one.

In all fairness to the President, I think it must be said that he is proceeding on a method to reach communities and unemployed that hitherto have been rather like stepchildren. The big relief projects under the former PWA system, and the Harry Hopkins method of handling relief in some way or other have managed to be concentrated in the great cities. While some persons may be unkind enough to say that the President is expanding his vote-getting machine to the small communities, it nevertheless remains as a fact that the system now undertaken will let some relief dribble down to those who have not had it before. In any event, since it is the Republican proposal and it is being tried out by the New Deal, it is an experiment very well worth watching.

The nations of the world find themselves in one of those peculiar and almost humorous situations that can develop only from the queer quirks of diplomacy. It has not progressed far enough yet for anyone to say what the outcome of this new diplomatic situation will be but it is not devoid, nevertheless, of possibilities both from the serious as well as the humorous side.

Quirks of Diplomacy

It may have escaped general notice that, under Mussolini's orders, King Victor Emanuel is now not only king of Italy but he is also emperor of Ethiopia. He was given this new title immediately after the conquering hordes of Italians had held their triumphant march in Rome and, as far as Mussolini was concerned, Ethiopia had gone out of existence, a dead nation.

Despite the fact that Mussolini would like to have Emperor Haile Selassie known only as a plain Mr. Tafari, most of the nations of the world still are compelled, through treaty agreement, foreign policy or plain desire to consider that Mr. Tafari still has the title of emperor of Ethiopia which he and his ancestors so long bore.

There is, however, this circumstance: since no nation has extended formal recognition to Italy as embracing Ethiopia, no diplomat can be formally received in that capacity. For example, the new Italian ambassador to the United States will come to Washington as the plenipotentiary of the king of Italy and emperor of Ethiopia but our ambassador to Italy, Mr. Welles, will go to Rome when he returns to his post this fall as the ambassador to the court of King Victor Emanuel — nothing being said about Ethiopia.

All of this results from American foreign policy and the foreign policies of other nations who oppose the taking of territory of another nation or race by force. It is a policy firmly footed, as witness the course of all of the nations excepting only Salvador in their attitude toward Manchuria which is now under Japanese control. Salvador recognized Japanese sovereignty over Manchuria largely because it was thereby enabled to consummate a great coffee sale.

When you have potatoes left over from a meal do not peel, as a cold potato keeps better with the jacket on. If peeled, it dries on the outside and must be trimmed before using, and that is wasteful. Also, an economical way to prepare mashed potatoes is boil them in their jackets, peel and then mash.

Use Doan's Pills. Doan's are for the kidneys only. They are recommended the world over. You can get the genuine, time-tested Doan's at any drug store.

DELAY POTATO DIGGING UNTIL COOLER WEATHER

Digging of potatoes should be postponed until the temperature drops from 10 to 20 degrees because potatoes dug when the temperature hovers near the 100-degree mark are apt to develop soft spots and a disagreeable odor

Alhough this trouble is known as sunscald, the actual temperature, rather than the sunlight, to which the freshly dug potatoes are subjected before storing, produces the deterioration

Stored potatoes which were dug during the extremely hot weather should be sorted over very carefully at once and the ones developing soft spots removed The remaining apparently good potatoes should be stored in the coolest place available Potatoes not too badly spotted or spoiled may be saved, in part, by storing in a cool place

President-Maker

HIS name may have been Jonathan Robins, American, or it may have been Thomas Nash, Englishman—which, history has never decided for sure. But it is certain that his death kept John Adams from serving a second term in the White House.

Robins, according to his story, was a Danbury (Conn.) boy attending school in England when he was seized by a British "press gang" and forced to serve in the British navy. Off the coast of Spain he struck down and killed the brutal captain of his ship, leaped overboard and swam safely to shore Making his way to Paris. he presented himself to the American minister who obtained passage for him on a ship bound for Charleston, S. C.

When he reached Charleston, the British consul there demanded his surrender, under the terms of the Jay treaty, and his return to England to stand trial for murder. Despite Robins' protest that he was an American, the consul declared that he was in reality Thomas Nash, a British subject.

Robins-Nash became an international figure—the symbol of a dispute between two nations. Finally John Adams settled it by ordering the boy to be surrendered. He was taken to England, tried and hanged. Then the storm broke. The Republicans, who had repeatedly denounced the treaty made by John Jay, the Federalist, seized upon the incident for political ammunition. The Republican papers kept it hot in the minds of the public and heaped abuse on Adams' head for "servile truckling to Great Britain." When the next election came, he was eliminated from the race which lay between Jefferson and Aaron Burr and Jefferson won.

Father-Congressman

ONLY one Roman Catholic priest ever served in the congress of the United States, and he wasn't even a native-born American.

He was Father Gabriel Richard, born in La Ville de Saintes, France, on October 15, 1767. Ordained a priest in 1790, he emigrated to the United States two years later and settled in Baltimore where he was appointed professor of mathematics in St. Mary's college located in that city.

Then he was sent as a missionary to the Indians in the old Northwest territory. He was stationed first at Kaskaskia, Ill., and in 1798 was placed in charge of St. Anne's parish in Detroit. He brought with him Michigan's first printing press and printed the first books and the first newspaper published in Detroit. Greatly interested in education, he aided in establishing schools and was one of the founders of the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor.

Father Richard was elected to the Eighteenth congress, serving from March, 1823, to March, 1825. He was defeated for re-election and returned to his church duties in Detroit. He died there September 13, 1832.

Longest Lakes

LAKE SUPERIOR is not only the biggest lake in the United States, but it's also the largest body of fresh water in the world. It's not the longest American lake, however, for Lake Michigan is 316 miles from end to end as compared to Superior's 254 miles. Both, however, have to bow to another for length of name! East of Webster, Mass., lies Lake Chargoggagoggmanchauggaggchaubunagaunggamaugg—46 letters including 14 g's and 10 a's!

According to tradition, this name developed from the fact that the original inhabitants of the region liked to fish in this lake which had three divisions—upper, middle and lower—and the fishing was best in the middle. Two Indian tribes, living at opposite ends of the lake, used to dispute over which had the right to fish there.

Finally they patched up their differences and made a treaty providing those living at the upper end would fish in the upper lake, those living at the lower end could use the lower lake, but neither could fish in the middle lake. From that treaty the lake got its name: Chargoggagogg — "You fish on your side"; Manchauggagogg—"I fish on my side"; Chaubunagaunggamaugg — "Nobody fish in the middle."

Luminous Legend of the Married Man Who "Went Saturday"

PEIPING

LET it not be said that the Chinese lack a sense of humor. The following tale, told by a professional story teller, holding forth at one of the fairs held on the outskirts of the city, was translated to me by the ricksha boy whose job it was to see that I didn't walk myself to death. Herewith the legend of The Man Who Went Saturday:

Wu Chi Chen, the son of a silk merchant, decided, upon the death of his father, to spend his patrimony in making one particular woman happy. With his fine eye for loveliness, he selected the belle of the village and led her to the altar. When the marriage ceremony was over and the guests were in the midst of merrymaking, Wu, all unconscious of the effect that his remarks would have upon those assembled, arose and made the announcement that henceforth he would make Saturday, the day of his marriage, memorable by bestowing upon the bride each succeeding Saturday during the whole of his lifetime a gift of price.

The bride clapped her hands in joy. Others of the company remained silent. Wu, seeing that his declaration was ill advised, passed it off with a mere gesture until he found opportunity to ask his best man what had caused the strange quiet.

"You're Nutty" Warns Pal

"You are crazy," said the friend "Who ever heard of such bondage? If you survive for thirty years, that means 1,560 Saturdays spent in pleasing one woman. I doubt very much that you will get through the first year. And besides, it is a bad example. It may have sounded good to the women, but no man alive can ever again look upon you with anything save mistrust."

"What care I so long as I hold the love of a perfect woman," said the groom.

"You poor nut," quoth the best man, who was frank in all his opinions, "you won't even hold your sanity. There is no such thing as a perfect woman. In a few short months your powers of selection will begin to fail. What to buy for her; where to buy it, and what to say when you present it, will begin to gnaw at your imagination.

"You will spend Thursday and Friday thinking about the approaching Saturday, and on Sunday and Monday you will writhe in agony at having made a possible bad selection in what you brought home. That you will get in Dutch with every other married man in town is, of course, a lead pipe cinch. And your wife will win the hatred of other women. It doesn't take much to see where you will bring up in this town."

"Your remarks are ill advised and offensive. I am far from convinced that there is cause for alarm. I shall beset myself with serenity . . ."

Too Many Saturdays

"Until next Saturday" interrupted the best man, rising, "and from then on, the rest of your days you will be on the way to becoming the battiest Chinaman among the four hundred and sixty million inhabitants of this country. You have gone completely kaflooie and I'm not seeing you again if it can be avoided."

So saying, the outspoken friend grabbed his hat and fled from the premises, followed by other guests who had taken similar alarm at Wu's foolhardy declaration.

And it came to pass after an expiration of a few months that Wu discovered the presence of more Saturdays than there were suitable gifts for "the perfect beautiful woman." Tradesmen from far and wide appeared in Wu's home town bringing many costly and beautiful creations offered for cash. The idea being to keep Wu's bride quiet throughout the week and hysterically happy of a Saturday. The procession of vendors that flocked to Wu's front door increased steadily until Wu instructed his servants not to answer the bell.

Old Friends Are Chilly

One by one, all the old friends of the bridegroom gave him the cold eye, until hardly anybody bothered to pass the time of day with him. His one monotonous query, "What is there under the sun that will make a suitable present for one's wife?" had done its diabolical work. It got so that whenever Wu Chi Chen showed up, all married men excused themselves and faded out.

One Saturday night, very late, after the bride had retired, The Man Who Went Saturday came home, quite drunk, crawled into his bed and slept peacefully for twelve hours.

At this juncture, my ricksha boy began to rock with laughter. I choked him off long enough to ask if Lord Saturday had brought home the usual week-end present.

"No, him forgettum, all same eveley man who like ketchum plenty sleep."

United States Will Not Interfere in Spain

EFFORTS of European nations, notably France, to persuade the United States to join in a neutrality pact concerning the civil war in Spain are not likely to succeed. However it is the intention of our government not to interfere in the situation in any way whatsoever. Instructions to this effect were sent to all American representatives in Spain by William Phillips, acting secretary of state. While asserting that the American neutrality law prohibiting assistance to warring nations does not apply to the Spanish civil war, Mr. Phillips said that the United States intended to conform with its "well established policy of noninterference with internal affairs in other countries, either in time of peace or civil strife."

Wm. Phillips

Most of the nations invited to participate in the non-intervention agreement were willing, but Germany temporarily blocked the plan by announcing that its answer would be delayed until Madrid gave a satisfactory reply to German protests regarding the execution of four German nationals in Barcelona.

American Ambassador Bowers abandoned his "floating embassy" aboard the coast guard cutter Cayuga and went ashore at St. Jean de Luz, France, by advice of the Department of State in Washington. According to the Army and Navy Journal, Mr. Bowers had tried to assume the role of commander of the American fleet in Spanish waters, and when the officers politely told him they took orders only from the Navy and Treasury departments or the President, he protested hotly to Washington, with the result recorded above.

Father Coughlin's Group Indorses Lemke

FOLLOWING the recommendation of Father Charles E. Coughlin, the National Union for Social Justice, in convention in Cleveland, indorsed the candidacy of Representatives Lemke and O'Brien, heads of the Union party ticket. But, also on the advice of the priest, the Lemke platform was not indorsed. The 25,000 members of the N. U. S. J. present enthusiastically and unanimously elected Father Coughlin president of the organization. Lemke and O'Brien both appeared before the convention, delivered speeches and were given a rousing reception.

The final episode of the meeting of the Coughlinites was sensational. The militant priest was delivering a dramatic address before a vast throng in the Cleveland municipal stadium when suddenly he faltered, begged pardon and announced weakly that he could not finish because of illness. He was half carried to a car that hurried him to his hotel. There it was said his indisposition, due to the heat and overwork, was not serious, and next day he returned to Detroit.

No New Taxes Promise for Coming Year

FOLLOWING a conference of President Roosevelt, Chairman Harrison of the senate finance committee, Chairman Doughton of the house ways and means committee and Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau, the administration's fiscal program for the coming year was thus outlined:

1. Assurance that no request will be made to the next congress for the levying of additional taxes or increase of present tax rates.

2. Launching of an immediate study by treasury and congressional tax consultants of present revenue laws as a basis for recommendations to the next congress for elimination of inequitable taxes, especially those unfair "to consumers or to trade."

3. Treasury assurance that "with continued recovery" the revenue yield is approaching the point where it will cover government costs and provide a surplus for reduction of the public debt.

Commodity Exchange Act Attacked in Court

AN EQUITY suit attacking the constitutionality of the commodity exchange act, chiefly on the ground that it seeks to regulate intrastate rather than interstate commerce in violation to the Constitution, was filed in the federal district court in Chicago.

The suit was instituted by Willam S. Moore, a member of the Chicago Mercantile Exchange, and names the exchange, its board of directors, and the following as defendants: Henry A. Wallace, secretary of agriculture; Leslie A. Fitz, supervisor of the commodity exchange administration in Chicago; Daniel C. Roper, secretary of commerce; Homer S. Cummings, United States attorney general; Michael L. Igoe, United States district attorney of the northern Illinois district, and Ernest J. Kruetgen, Chicago postmaster.

In his petition Mr. Moore asked that the commodity exchange act be declared unconstitutional, void, and unenforceable.

Reds Waging War to Win America, Says Hobson

ADMIRAL RICHMOND P. HOBSON, now head of the Public Welfare association of New York, told the National Conference of Clergymen and Laymen at Asheville that Comintern, the international Communist propaganda agency, is waging "scientific warfare" to gain control of the United States. He said the board of strategy of his association, after exhaustive studies, has collected evidence that a competent Communist general staff has been at work and has succeeded to the extent of casting widespread doubt on the Constitution and bringing discredit on the Supreme court.

John A. Lyon, New York attorney and a leading Methodist layman, supported Admiral Hobson by citing the success of pacifism throughout Methodist youth organizations.

Migration From Drouth States Is Urged

DR. C. W. THORNTHWAITE, former climatologist of the University of Oklahoma, has made a study of the drouth area of the Great Plains, and his interesting conclusions are published by the University of Pennsylvania. Briefly, Thornthwaite recommends that 59,000 migrate from the farms of the damaged region. He contends that wind erosion has damaged 65 per cent of the plains region, extending from the Canadian border into the Texas panhandle. A long range government program for the return of millions of acres of wheat land to its native sod, he says, might be the only means of checking the devastating dust storms.

Observing that long dry spells have been frequent in the history of the plains, Thornthwaite predicts that "the present drouth might be prolonged for 20 or more years."

The weather expert estimates that a minimum of 12,610 families should move out of Montana, the state in which he reports the greatest "surplus population." He urges a migration of 12,200 families from Texas and 7,360 from North Dakota. Heavy removals also are suggested for South Dakota, Nebraska, Kansas, Oklahoma, Wyoming, and Colorado.

Borah and Robinson Are Renominated for Senate

TWO veterans of the senate, William E. Borah of Idaho, Republican, and Joseph T. Robinson of Arkansas, Democrat and majority leader, won their fights for renomination without much difficulty. Borah defeated Byron Defenbach, who was backed by the Townsendites. His Democratic opponent at the polls in November will be Gov. C. Ben Ross.

In the Presidential contest the American Federation of Labor, as an organization, will maintain its traditional non-partisan policy, according to the firm declaration of President William Green. The federation, said he, is not in the Non-Partisan Labor league, which is backing President Roosevelt.

AAA May Abandon Control of Grain Crops

OFFICIALS of the agricultural adjustment administration discussed in Washington the advisability of drastically reducing or removing altogether the planting restrictions on corn and wheat next year. No decision was made and farmers will be consulted before any changes are ordered. It was, however, definitely stated that wheat acreage will be expanded.

Secretary of Agriculture Wallace, passing through Chicago on his way back from Iowa, said he believed government-controlled crop insurance would prevent wild price fluctuations in farm produce. The plan, he said, has not progressed beyond the embryo stage, but probably would entail storage of crops in government granaries. Each farmer, depending on the percentage of his normal crop he wished to insure, would make his "insurance" payments in the form of bushels to be stored in a common pool.

The plan, preventing "lean years and fat years," would tend to stabilize market prices because it would assure a continual adequate supply of whatever commodity was to be insured. Gradually, he said, it might be worked out to include all major farm produce.

THE COMFORT SHOVEL

In a facetious article the Springfield Mass Union tells of the invention of a new "comfort shovel" for WPA workers devised by a humanitarian in that city The new shovel is said to be the greatest boon for tired humanity since the advent of the rocking chair

The invention was inspired, it said by the complaints of WPA workmen that the shovels issued them are too short to lean on, and too high to sit on This is remedied the new model which has a curved arm rest at elbow height of shovelers who are forced to stand while not shoveling Halfway down the handle is an adjustable seat, so that workers who have wearied of leaning when not shoveling can sit down

The seat is fixed on a pivot, so that in case the worker might really have to shovel something in an emergency the tool can actually be used Its primary purpose, however, is for leaning and sitting
The inventor contends that a hired WPA shoveler, paid for not shoveling, is entitled to the same comforts as are non-hog-raisers, for example, and all other people paid by the government for not doing something.

KNOW ANY BIGGER?

Many people complain of the droughts now and wonder how to get their potatoes to grow, but my Grandad had a scheme which always produced a crop no matter what the weather might be. A long time ago the country had one of the greatest droughts in history The earth began to turn dry and little by little the plants in the fields and gardens began to turn yellow and then brown Everybodys that is except Grandad's.
The soil in his garden was continually wet and everything was growing bigger and better than it ever had been before People stopped and stared wondering how it had happened But just a few weeks before they had laughed at Grandad's mistake in planting his onions and potatoes in the same row However, they soon learned to laugh out of the other side of their mouths for it was the onions that did the trick Being so close they kept the eyes of the potatoes running so fast that the water completely covered the garden

DANGER LURKS AT HOME

Next to riding in an automobile the most dangerous place one can be is in his own home, according to figures compiled by the National Safety Council covering the accident record for 1935, when more than 100,000 cases of accidental death were reported
Automobile deaths reached the all-time high record of about 37,000, but fatalities in homes of the country took second place, numbering approximately 31,000 It is a sad commentary on the habits of the American people that easily avoidable home accidents cause more injuries and deaths than industrial accidents
The average American industry has made astonishing strides in reducing both the frequency and severity of accidents Part of this achievement followed the better guarding of machinery. But the most important cause of the reduction was the installation of a philosophy of carefulness in the workmen
At home and on the road, the man who wouldn't think of taking a chance at his work, apparently throws caution to the winds The driving errors that cause motor accidents are well known Not so well known are the principal causes of home accidents Falling out of windows, slipping in the bathtub, falling downstairs, tampering with electrical equipment--these are sources of thousands of deaths and injuries each year.
These figures should make one think and think more than once The hospital and the morgue await those who are thoughtless, careless and reckless

CAUSES OF AUTO ACCIDENTS

Apparently the hghway is safest when it appears the most dangerous Statistics released by a large insurance company show that 85 percent of all the accidents in 1935 occurred in clear weather Only two percent happened in fog, and about the same number occurred during snow In spite of or because the the general fear drivers have of slippery roads only 11 percent of last years accidents happened during rain Statistics further reveal that 75 percent of all the accidents occurred when the streets and roads were perfectly dry, and only 20 percent of them were on curves or crooked roads. Neither was there an increase in the number of accidents after dark

SPEED POSSIBILITIES

Certain aviation engineers predict that airplanes may eventually attain a speed of 1,000 miles per hour, also that non-stop flights around the world will be made
As the apparent movement of the sun due to the earth's rotation is less than 1,000 miles an hour in latitudes above and below the equator, such a speed would present some interesting collateral experiences
For example: Traveling west, one might circle the globe in day light, as the plane would keep pace with the sun Traveling east the plane would meet the sun twice, so that it would apparently experience two days in 24 hours
Strangest of all, if the plane were flying somewhat faster than the visible movement of the sun it might start out shortly after sunset and fly west to overtake the sun, which would appear to rise in the west Continuing its flight it would finally leave the sun behind so far that it would appear to set in the east.
Watches carried under these conditions might tell how long the plane had been in the air, but it would be of little use in determining the time of day at any given point during the flight

Per Capita Debt Grows to $263

Seventh Successive Year of Deficits; Spending Increases.

With heavier taxation than ever before levied on the American people the government is moving into its seventh successive year of huge deficits Expenditures for the present fiscal year 1937 probably will be more than nine billions of dollars This will bring total expenditures under four Roosevelt years to more than thirty-two billions, as against receipts of sixteen billions from taxes

By borrowing to make up the difference between income and spending the Roosevelt Administration increased the public debt more than eleven billions in its first three fiscal years The debt on June 30, 1936, was $33,778,543,494 and it may reach thirty-seven billions by June 30, 1937.

The Per Capita Debt.

The per capita debt burden has increased enormously during the past generation Just prior to the World War the burden due to the debt of the Federal Government was equal to only about $12 for each man, woman and child in the United States The per capita Federal debt rose to about $210 at the end of the World war and declined to about $131 by the beginning of the depression

At the beginning of the first full fiscal year of the Roosevelt administration the per capita debt was about $180 At the conclusion of three years of the Roosevelt administration this burden, applicable to every man, woman and child in the country, had advanced to approximately $263 each. And during the present fiscal year it may go to almost $300 each In other words the New Deal will have cost in four years each of our people individually the sum of $120 Multiply this by 4.8 representing the average number of persons per family, and the result is an increase of $576 per family in the Federal debt as a result of the Roosevelt administration

Summary of Situation.

Following are some briefly stated facts about the Federal budget situation.

Expenditures in the four years for which the New Deal is responsible (June 30, 1933 to June 30, 1937) will exceed by at least 27 per cent the direct cost to the United States in carrying on its operations in the World War.

Expenditures in the four years will be at least 33 per cent more than the total cost of the Government from 1789 to 1913, a period of 124 years.

For the entire four years expenditures will be at an average rate of about $2 for every $1 in receipts

Aggregate deficits of the four years will be about equal to the total public debt at the beginning of the depression.

The public debt at the end of three full fiscal years of the New Deal was 32 per cent above the peak of the World War debt and 61 per cent greater than at the beginning of the Roosevelt administration

Expenditures in the fiscal year 1936 far exceed those of any other peace-time year

Expenditures in the fiscal year 1937 may be greater than in 1936 even though the bonus item helped to make the total of the fiscal year 1936 abnormally large.

Emergency as well as general expenditures have continued to increase, although Mr Roosevelt says the emergency has passed, and although business improvement has been in progress.

Deficit in 1938?

If New Deal policies prevail, further large appropriations for emergency purposes and another large deficit appear inevitable in 1938

Instead of the reduction of 25 per cent in Government expenditures pledged by the 1932 Democratic platform the average of more than $8,000,000,000 for each of the four years of the New Deal represents an increase of approximately 100 per cent over the normal total prior to the depression.

Expenditures of more than $32,000,000,000 in four years as against receipts of only about $16,000,000,000 means that the New Deal pays out $2 for every $1 taken in

The New Deal while pretending to the people that it is financing its expenditures by "soaking-the-rich" has actually shifted a greater part of the tax burden to miscellaneous taxes—many of them concealed—which are paid by the general consuming public.

Those New Post-offices.

Woodford County, Illinois, is aroused over the determination of the Postoffice Department to build a $75,000 postoffice in the town of Eureka Newspapers in the county protest that Eurkea now has the best postoffice building in Woodford county, which was built only a few years ago The Editor of the County Journal urges that the money be spent on a sewage system, which is needed, and which would give employment opportunities, also needed At last reports the protests had received no official attention.

Wheat Imports Jump Rapidly

United States Now Buys 40 Million Bushels From Other Nations.

By FRANK RIDGWAY

Gears of international trade machinery have been thrown in reverse to the extent that the United States is today the world's largest wheat importer, with the single exception of Great Britain, including North Ireland. In that regrettable position this nation has imported from foreign countries more than 40 million bushels of wheat within the past year

For at least 70 years, this country had been a net exporter of wheat. A dozen years ago, farmers bragged about selling to foreign countries more than 259 million bushels of wheat in one year, exceeding the exports of any other country in the world. Today, they are forced to stand by and watch foreign growers sell wheat to America's customers abroad. They also are supplying a large part of the market here at home.

Government Tinkering

This revolutionary change has been brought about not only by drouths, but also by government tinkering with production and foreign trade policies. Had there been no government meddling, our growers would have had more wheat to sell during the next 12 months when prices are expected to be higher than they have been for several years.

After three years experience under a crop and livestock production program dictated to them by officials of a centralized government, many practical farmers feel that they would have done a better job acting individually They must pay their share of the New Deal dole money sent out to individual farmers for reducing their production which has contributed to the present predicament.

Farmers had been told by political planners that the reduced production of farm products, brought about by adverse weather conditions and by the Agricultural Adjustment Administration program, had been good for them. As they now stand looking backward, each farmer is better able to appraise for himself what the drouth and the Agricultural Adjustment Administration did for him and decide as an individual whether it has been good or bad.

Pay Higher Prices

Producers, working under various handicaps, are now threshing a wheat crop estimated to be approximately 638 million bushels, more than 145 million bushels less than the five-year average from 1929 to 1933. It will again be necessary for the United States to bring in large quantities of hard wheat to blend with soft wheat during the next year. Our millers will be forced to pay a higher price plus 42 cents a bushel duty because Canada's wheat crop is short.

When the wheat drills start this fall, many United States growers are expected to make their own decisions as to the number of acres they will plant and encourage their neighbors to do likewise.

Lincoln, Landon Have Same Initials

Mrs. Wilma D. Hoyal, assistant chairman of the Republican National Committee, isn't superstitious, but she points out that Abe Lincoln and Alf Landon have the same initials

"Abe Lincoln," says Mrs Hoyal, "brought our country through its greatest crisis in the 19th century. If there is any significance in this repetition, Alf Landon surely will be elected to do the same for us in the 20th century."

LATE CUTTING MAY RUIN ALFALFA FOR NEXT YEAR

Shall I make a third cutting of alfalfa? is a question which many farmers have been pondering recently

Alfalfa should preferably not be cut after Sept 1 and in no event should it be cut later than the middle of September Many a farmer has ruined his stand of alfalfa by cutting off too late in the fall A heavy growth carried into the winter usually more than pays for itself by the larger production the following year.

Because of the drouth, many farmers were late in making their second cutting of alfalfa this year They were waiting for rain and for the plants to grow a little taller Many of those who made a second cutting late are now puzzled about whether they can take off a third cutting without hurting the stand

Either the third cutting must be taken off at once or else not at all if the field is to be left down another year

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted
by William Bruckart

National Press Building Washington, D. C.

Washington.—President Roosevelt has come out again with a statement that the burden of taxes is regrettable and that there must be no new levies nor tax increase by the next congress. He chose to get his views to the public by staging a conference at the White House the other day when he summoned Chairman Harrison of the senate finance committee and Chairman Doughton of the house ways and means committee for a breakfast meeting to discuss the subject. He followed this almost too quickly by releasing a statement, a letter from Secretary Morgenthau that substantiated the spoken word of his two congressional leaders.

No New Tax Levies

But somehow the word from the White House prompted many observers here to pick flaws in the pronouncement; they began at once to find several places in the new picture that appeared to have been smeared over by the paint brush, and, in addition, there was a sudden yelp from the Republican national committee which did not help Mr. Roosevelt's plans to show the country that the tax burden had reached its peak.

The Republicans were quite harsh because they called attention to the fact that Mr. Roosevelt on three previous occasions had assured the country there would be no new taxes, and that in each instance new tax legislation somehow or other had been enacted by congress.

Aside from the presidential declaration that there would be no new taxes nor increases in the present levies and that there would be a study of the general tax structure, the President made the point through Secretary Morgenthau's letter that there were a good many hundred millions in "recoverable assets." He also urged upon the country that business has improved so rapidly that additional federal income may be expected from the present tax rates. This latter, of course, is true providing business holds its own or moves to higher levels but it is with respect to the recoverable assets that many questions now are being asked. For the sake of clarity, it may be explained that the recoverable assets to which Mr. Roosevelt referred consisted of the loans of federal money by the various emergency agencies for relief and recovery purposes. There are the millions loaned by the Reconstruction Finance corporation; the equally large amounts loaned by the Works Progress administration and the Public Works administration to states, counties and cities for relief or for job-making construction. In addition, there are loans by the Home Owners' Loan corporation, the Federal Farm Credit administration, loans for crop production, for marketing and countless other types. These are all carried on the books as recoverable assets and their total may amount to as much as $8,000,000,000.

The policy of the New Deal administration is to consider these at their face value. It is the claim of the White House consistently that these loans will be repaid and that they can be used to retire an equal amount of the national debt, which, indeed, is true if the loans ever are repaid.

So, whenever the New Deal is called on to defend itself against charges of imposing a gigantic burden of tax or an equally gigantic burden of public debt, its spokesmen attempt to demonstrate that the public debt figure as well as the taxes must be considered in their relationship to these recoverable assets.

To explain the Roosevelt position further, one may recall that a month ago when the public debt reached the staggering total of $33,779,000,000 the Treasury secretary contended in a public statement that against this sum there should be offset the cash assets in the general fund of the Treasury, then totaling $2,681,000,000 and the $2,000,000,000 of gold that is sterilized in what is known as the exchange sterilization fund.

"In addition," Mr. Morgenthau added in his statement, "we have certain assets representing obligations due us upon which the Treasury will realize cash and which will ultimately be available for debt retirement. These recoverable assets—millions to home owners, to farmers, to railways, to banks and insurance companies, to states, and cities—now total more than $4,000,000,000. These three items—cash on hand, stabilization fund and recoverable loans—provide an offset of $8,750,000,000 to the $33,779,000,000 public debt."

It thus is made to appear directly in issue how completely the Roosevelt administration calculates using these recoverable assets in retiring the public debt. Having gone so thoroughly on record, it is difficult to see how there could have been such a mistake made as developed from the White House conference on taxes. I refer to the inclusion in Secretary Morgenthau's letter of a reference to the recoverable assets as one of the reasons why no new taxes will not have to be levied. Some critics have stated boldly that the White House statements on the recoverable assets cannot be justified. Their assertion is that if the Treasury properly included recoverable assets as a thing to be used in offsetting the public debt, then by the same token those recoverable assets, or repayments of them, cannot be used to reduce the tax burden. In other words, the money represented by those assets cannot be spent in two different ways. Either it must be used to retire public debt or it must be used for current spending by the administration. It seems to be simply a refusal to believe the old adage that you cannot have your cake and eat it too.

If I should attempt to analyze the situation in the light of a personal equation I think I might properly say that if I loaned $500 to a friend and at the same time if I borrowed $500 from a bank, I might properly say the $500 loaned to the friend could be used to pay off the bank loan. So far, so good. But if the friend repaid $250 to me and I spent that $250 and had no other resources, I can't quite figure out how I would pay the bank the $500 I had borrowed from that institution.

Although perhaps my worries as an individual about government policies may not be very important because I am just one individual, I entertain considerable fear about those recoverable assets in another respect. For some reason—and I think I can state it—I doubt that a very large portion of those recoverable assets ever will be collected. I have a hunch that in the next fifteen or twenty years the bulk of those debts which the Roosevelt administration counts as repayable will be cancelled or defaulted. In either event, I think I see how politics is going to play an important part and I am convinced further that Mr. Morgenthau and Mr. Roosevelt as well, if he shares Mr. Morgenthau's belief, is overlooking that very vital influence when he holds these loans as likely to be repaid.

Default Likely

I recall that the late Albert C. Ritchie, four times a Democratic governor of Maryland, predicted that the money loaned for the various purposes outlined above, would never be paid back. Indeed, Governor Ritchie, who was a very practical man and who thoroughly disliked deluding himself, used the word "repudiation" in connection with these debts. He said they would be handled just like the $11,000,000,000 of war loans made to European nations.

It is a noble thought, of course, that the loans will be repaid, yet it is quite apparent that a cancellation drive is already under way. I think most of those who do me the honor to read my column will recall that more than a year ago I directed their attention to the reduction in interest rates which congress had ordered on many of the loans. That is simply the first step. Cancellation proposals, undisguised, are bound to follow.

Unless I am mistaken, the astute Jesse Jones, chairman of the Reconstruction Finance corporation and a man who never kids himself, already has kissed good-by to many of the millions that have been loaned by his agency. Of course, the Reconstruction Finance corporation carries those loans on its books and counts them still as valid. But I am of the opinion that Mr. Jones probably regards those items as dead debts.

But to go further with the idea of cancellation, it takes no stretch of the imagination to say that the Home Owners' Loan corporation, for example, will soon have a good many thousand foreclosed properties on its hands. It takes no more imagination to say that politicians who have ridden into office with promises to help those people whose homes have been foreclosed will carry out their promises by further voting interest reduction or curtailment of principal.

A more striking illustration, it seems to me, can be found in the case of the loans to states, cities and towns. Who among the politicians is going to have the courage to resist the tumult and the voting of their constituents to avoid increase in their local taxes when they call for cancellation of the loans?

While the bonus for the ex-service men is a dead issue, every one knows how representatives and senators capitulated to the demands of the veterans' lobby. Picture for yourself, if you will, how much stronger the demand will be when a whole community sets up a howl to have the funds it has borrowed from the federal government finally declared to have been just a gift and not a loan.

"Hand-Made Inferno"

By FLOYD GIBBONS
Famous Headline Hunter

GATHER 'round the soda fountain, boys and girls. Mike Foley is standing treat. Mike lives at Jackson Heights, N. Y., and he's going to treat us to a swell yarn.

Mike's an old hand at this treating business. He was doing it professionally as far back as June, 1884—the month and year in which he had his big adventure.

But don't get the idea that Mike went around handing out ten-cent cigars like a guy that's trying to be elected alderman. Not on your life. Mike was an OIL treater—one of the lads who processed kerosene so it could be burned in lamps. And a mighty dangerous job that was, too.

Mike worked for the Standard Oil company at a big refinery and storage yard that was then located in Long Island City.

Lightning Strikes Huge Oil Tank!

The tanks in which the oil was treated, and on which Mike worked, were huge affairs twenty feet in diameter and thirty or more feet high. You got to the top of them by wooden stairways. And up the side of each tank ran a pair of six-inch pipes that carried the chemicals with which the oil was treated.

Well sir, to get down to the story, Mike Foley was up on the top of one of the big tanks giving its contents a good, thorough treating. Part of that job consisted of blowing compressed air through the oil, and that was often a messy procedure. Oil would slop over the side of the tank and saturate the wooden staircase. That was not only messy, but dangerous—as subsequent events amply demonstrated.

A thunderstorm was brewing while Mike was inside, under cover of the tank's sheltering top. The storm broke, about quarter after two in the afternoon, and about two-thirty he heard a loud crack. Lightning! It had struck the tank.

Mike Moves Swiftly to Close Trap Doors.

Mike's two bosses had gone to the office to give in their reports. Mike was all alone in the tank, so it was up to him. He ran out from under the shelter-roof to see what had happened. The lightning had struck all right. The oil-soaked, wooden stairs were on fire. The blaze, starting apparently from the top, had spread down four or five steps by the time Mike got there.

There was one thing that had to be done, then—done mighty quickly, too. Around the top of the tank were five trap doors, wide open to let out the gases that formed in the tank during treatments. Those doors had to be closed before the fire got through them and the whole tank went up in flames.

Mike dashed for the doors. He got one closed—then another. At that point he turned and took a look at the burning stairway. The flames had spread down four or five more steps. The fire was blazing with even greater fury.

Casabianca Really Had Nothing on Mike

And that wasn't all that was worrying Mike, either. Any minute now—doors or no doors—the tank might take fire and go up with a big WHOOSH! And where would that leave Mike? Not much of anywhere, to tell the truth about it. Just let that tank get going good, and Mike would be trapped. There wouldn't be much left of him but a few cinders when it was all over.

The thought put new energy into him. He got the next three doors closed in jig time. And then he went back to the stairway that was his only avenue of escape. But when Mike got to the stairway, he stopped. No use trying to get down there. Not only the whole stair, but likewise the platform leading to it, was a raging inferno of flame. The timbers that supported it had been eaten through by the blaze. If Mike wasn't burned to death on the way down, he'd be killed in a fall when the weakened supports broke and sent him crashing to earth.

"So there I stood," says Mike, "forty-five feet from the ground, like young Casabianca—the boy who stood on the burning deck. A crowd had gathered down below, and about eight hundred men who worked in the loading sheds near the dock were yelling to me to jump. I didn't want to do that—it would have been almost as bad as burning to death. Still, I couldn't stay up there, either. Most any minute that tank might go up with a roar—and take me along with it."

Mike Was a Good Hand on the Flying Rings.

It looked pretty bad for Mike—but he still had a trick or two up his sleeve. "At that time," he says, "I was a member of the Star Athletic club of Long Island City, and I was pretty good on the flying rings. So I swung over the edge of the platform."

What followed after that brought gasps from the men down below. Like a circus acrobat, high overhead, he began swinging himself along on the braces that held the platform up. He had traveled eight or ten feet around the side of the tank before the spectators saw what he was aiming at. Then they set up a cheer as Mike reached one of the six-inch pipes that ran down the side of the tank and began sliding to safety.

"That pipe was so close to the tank," says Mike, "that I couldn't put my legs around it. I had to grip it with my knees and slide down in jerks about two inches at a time. But I got down all right except for some the ones I was wearing. They were ruined."

Prescott's Writings

William Hickling Prescott was born in Salem, Mass., in 1796, where he continued to live during the years he won his fame. He wrote 16 thick volumes which are classics without reading a word of them. One eye was destroyed, another made useless, by a schoolfellow's prank when he was 16 and a freshman at Harvard Nevertheless he completed college and chose to make history a profession Assistants read to him six hours a day the vast sources of material which he assimilated—memorizing as much as 50 pages of printed matter at a time and dictated into enduring accounts of Spanish conquest in the Americas His first volume was completed a century ago.

Helgoland, Germany

Helgoland, Germany, takes its name, Holyland, from having been a center of Christian activity in the seventh century, but it later fell into evil ways as a haven for pirate bands that ravaged the Hanseatic merchant traffic of the North Sea. To this Hamburg put a stop, joining the island to the neighboring Schleswig, whence it passed to Denmark and finally to England about the beginning of the last century. The trading of Helgoland to Germany for the island of Zanzibar off the African coast brought on a storm of popular protest in both countries. In England, the transaction was explained as the wish of Queen Victoria to grant a favor to her nephew, the young Emperor William.

England Learns Also

Europe learns that political experiments cost money. England decided to prevent Mussolini taking Ethiopia, camping along the imperial British highway, and controlling Lake Tana, source of Nile water. The attempt failed. England backed out of that situation, hastily, after her war department had assured our so-called war department in Washington that Mussolini could not possibly conquer Ethiopia in less than three years, probably not at all.

Arthur Brisbane

When the dust had settled and England, with her chicken-feed assortment of 51 league nations, had apologized to Mussolini and tossed Haile Selassie into the waste-basket, England found her foreign commerce much damaged. She had missed Mussolini, and shot herself in the pocketbook.

For a little while she will copy Job: "I will lay mine hand upon my mouth. Once I have spoken . . . yea twice, but I will proceed no further."

Paris, which is France, decided to sing and dance a new carmagnole with Russian dressing; clenched fists raised in air a la Russe; red flag waving; the doleful strains of the Communist hymn, l'Internationale, and its Communist injunction, "Arise, ye prisoners of starvation," excellently sung from the Arc de Triomphe to the Place de la Bastille.

You can hardly imagine what fire, fury and enthusiasm thousands of young and old French gentlemen put into that hymn, although many of them showed few outward signs of starvation.

There were, and are, manifestations everywhere. Now in the chamber of deputies, Monsieur Gaston Gerard, practical French statesman, asks, "What has become of our foreign tourists and their spending money?"

---

M. Gerard tells the deputies something must be done. In 1927, 2,125,000 foreigners from all over the world visited France, spending much money. Visitors now number only 700,000; as a rule with little money to spend—oysters containing no pearl; many that come to help sing l'Internationale bring no money.

Foreign visitors, says M. Gerard, used to give highly paid employment to half a million French men and women; spent 500,000,000 francs for French railroad and steamship tickets; scattered throughout France from 12 to 15 thousand millions of francs.

Fifteen billions, even in francs, are "real money" here. M. Gerard tells the chamber French prices are too high. There is something in that, with the four-cent franc costing six to seven cents in the United States—a comic-opera situation, considering the relative wealth of the two nations.

M. Gerard thinks there should be some cabinet official to look after foreigners, with better propaganda and fewer vexatious taxes on foreigners; there is nothing in that.

Foreigners do not voluntarily travel and spend money where they feel they are not wanted. The cosmopolitan, educated Frenchman is as polite and hospitable as ever, but ask him what sort of reception the crowd gives to the foreigner, British especially. It offends the British ear to hear A bas les Anglis!—"Down with the British!"

An innocent American, in an innocent average American automobile, sallied forth on July 14 to help France celebrate the destruction of the Bastille, and perhaps give a few feeble cheers for Lafayette, or Woodrow Wilson, or somebody.

Great crowd in the Champs Elysees, especially around the innocent American car, with new paint, shiny chromium and several cylinders. A polite policeman says monsieur should know better than to appear in a car of "grand luxury" on such a day. Such luxury cars you may see by the thousands and millions on American roads.

Nothing happens to the car of grand luxury; it crosses the Avenue of the Champs Elysees, about 300 feet, in less than twenty minutes. The French, newly self-identified as "prisoners of starvation," are interested in the auto American, which is careful not to bump anybody.

The bourgeois, the "rich," an extinct species, although it does not yet know it, are nervous. In a vague way they feel that they are held responsible for all those "prisoners of starvation," with their strong voices, deep chests, powerful fists and pink complexions.

w Joseph and Mary were strict and naturally enough they felt it incumbent upon them to rear their child according to the Holy Law. When the infant was eight days old he was circumcised and given the Hebrew name of Jeshua, which in Greek was Jesus And on the fortieth day Mary repaired to the Temple and, in accordance with the Jewish custom, presented her offering of purification She brought her little one with her on that journey, and she marveled much to see an aged man named Symeon, and a prophetess named Anna, recognize the holy child and openly declare him to be none other than the promised Messiah of Israel.

The Flight to Egypt

SOON after the holy family left Jerusalem and returned to their lodging place at Bethlehem, certain Magi or Wise Men from Persia came to the capital and began to inquire where they could find him that was born King of the Jews. They declared they had seen his star in the East and had come expressly to worship him But when King Herod heard of this, he was filled with alarm, for he had no desire to lose his throne By means of a low stratagem he discovered where the infant lay, and at once he began to plot to destroy him. But Joseph was forewarned in a dream, and just in time he took his wife and the child and fled with them across the wilderness to Egypt. And only when Herod died did the holy family return to Palestine. Joseph brought his wife and child to Nazareth and once more took up his work there as a carpenter.

The village of Nazareth was very small; indeed it was so obscure that it never once receives mention in the Old Testament. But though small, it lay in the very heart of Lower Galilee, and therefore was far from secluded. Not far away from it were the great highways radiating in all directions, and because of these highways Nazareth lay open to all the many influences coming from the cities and lands of the East and West.

Galilee had once been a place inhabited largely by half-breed Jews, but from the time of the Maccabees it became a center of the most intense Jewish patriotism The people there were not as well educated as those in Jerusalem, but for all that they were not lacking in extreme devotion to God and fervent faith that very soon he would send the Messiah to rescue them from the talons of Rome. Indeed, the spirit of rebellion against Rome was fiercer in Galilee than almost anywhere else in Palestine.

About an hour's walk from Nazareth lay the important city of Sepphoris, and we know from history that this was for a time a stronghold of the revolutionists. All around Nazareth there were other cities and villages where the spark of rebellion lay always ready to be fanned. And from this we can imagine what must have been one of the great influences in the early life of Jesus. In the alleyways of Nazareth he must have heard constant talk of the wickedness of the Roman oppressor, and in the synagogue his ears must have been filled with repeated prayers for the coming of a Redeemer.

For the Jews were convinced that the intolerable evil could not last much longer. Of old the prophets had taught them that a day of release must come, a day wherein their God would send them a wondrous leader, a Messiah—that is, an "Anointed One"—who would miraculously overthrow the hated enemy and then reign in peace forevermore.

And the more horrible the persecutions, the nearer seemed the advent of this Anointed One. Each day was thought to be the very last, and every hour the people pricked up their ears for the sound of the Messiah's trumpet. And it was in such an atmosphere that the child Jesus grew to boyhood.

Tales and Traditions from American Political History

THE BIG SHOW COSTS

SOME presidential candidates are wafted into office on a cloud of smoke while the aspirations of others are dashed to oblivion by the same breeze.

All of which is by way of saying that the cigar-making industry is due for a boom, now that a presidential election year is with us. As far back as 1888 when Harrison was elected the astounding number of 100,000,000 more cigars were manufactured than the preceding year. By 1920 and its increased population the boost in cigar making for the presidential year came to the tidy total of $20,000,000 above that of 1919.

The astonishing thing about the big, countrywide show of an election is that the Havana filler the politician stuffs into your mouth is merely an item in the whole campaign and election costs. The latter, it has been estimated by competent and conservative observers, reaches $40,000,000.

In addition to that huge sum there are other millions impossible to compute

Out of all this spending it is perhaps fortunate for the American public that usually more good than merely the choosing of a President is the result.

For one thing, hundreds of thousands of persons are employed—not the least of them being newspaper workers who figure briefly but actively in compiling election returns.

In Chicago, for example, the business of collecting returns is in the hands of the police. An officer visits each precinct, obtains two results of the vote. One of these he speeds to the board of election commissioners, the other to the City News Bureau which has moved bodily into Chicago's council chambers for the evening.

Rents are paid out for organization quarters, down to the smallest precinct; spellbinders are employed, with all expenses paid; bands are hired; banquets are spread . . . and the politicians pass out cigars.

Did we say $40,000,000 expense? Well, it's a conservative estimate, anyway.

CROPS AND ELECTIONS

IF THE Democratic party is dubious about the 1936 election it may be because of the drought.

History of our political campaigns indicates that the size of crops has an important bearing on national elections. In other words, if there be a scarcity of farm products, the party in power is turned out of office.

None can say that this is an infallible rule, yet there are notable periods and events which tend to prove its truth. A seven years' drought, for example, starting in 1833, is the first widespread destruction of crops of which there is record. At the end of it, Martin Van Buren was voted out of office and the Whigs came in with a great show of strength.

A second drought occurred shortly before the Civil war, but the latter event dominated, of course, every trend of political development for that period. In 1874 there was a large Republican majority in the lower branch of congress . . . but there had been drought years immediately preceding, and Democratic congressmen were elected in droves.

Beginning in 1887, ten years showed a deficiency of rainfall and crops naturally suffered. It was during this period, perhaps more than in any other, that the American voter practiced assiduously his right to vote parties in and out of power.

Conditions may be changed today. The Democratic party, which happens to be in the saddle, has survived one of the country's worst crop years, 1934. There are political observers who assert that we are too much an industrial nation today for Old Man Weather to lay such a heavy hand on political fortunes.

Only time will tell if this estimate of the situation is correct. When this is written, however, indications point clearly that burning, dry winds have destroyed a large part of the spring wheat crop in the Dakotas and Montana.

Industrial nation or not, it is at least an even bet that when the campaign warms up particular attention will be paid to those three states by Messrs. Hamilton and Farley—not to mention Congressman Lemke, who hails from that area himself.

Solving Midseason Dress Problem

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

WHEN summer clothes begin to take on a jaded and somewhat worse-for-wear "has been" air, and you are loath to force the season by donning advance fall fashions before the psychological moment arrives, then what? Aye, that's the problem that has destroyed perfectly good dispositions and peace of mind of the fair sex throughout decades and decades of time.

However, we are not going to be tantalized and tormented with such momentous worries this midseason, for good news concerning this question is winging its way fashionward at this very moment. Tidings of great cheer, they are told in terms of dresses and suits tailored of the black or dark-toned silk sheers, nets and laces which have come into favor of late as they never came before. These cool and comfortable dark sheers are a perfect blend from summer to fall. In such you are sure to hold poise and serenity in the assurance that you will be smartly and appropriately costumed all through the prologue which nature and the weatherman play to autumn. In fact, no wardrobe may be said to be complete these days without at least one tailored black or dark sheer in its collection.

Acquire a two-piece gown of black silk marquisette as shown to the left in the illustration and your between-season dress trials will vanish like dew on a sunny morn. In regard to selecting a sheer for dependable wear, perhaps a few words of advice will not come amiss. When you buy, insist on a weave of guaranteed quality. In order to get maximum service and real joy and satisfaction in the costume you rely upon to carry you through the between-season valiantly, the sheer of which it is made should be nothing less than pure silk and fast dye. Perish the thought of a shoddy black that is apt to take on a greenish bilious cast as cheaper blacks in cheaper weaves are wont to do. Buy pure silk and your dress will wear dependably. As to the smart styling of the model pictured, note that it is a tunic costume. Newly arriving fashions verify previous reports that the tunic will continue to be the big idea for fall. The large black buttons that fasten this tunic, also the modish short sleeve and the white jabot, register important fashion details.

Advance fashions tell of the emphasis placed on the princess silhouette for both dresses and coats as the print costume with full-length princess coat of the print in this group demonstrates The print is black and wine on a cream ground. There is increasing interest shown for wine and red shades and they are regarded as color "firsts" for fall and winter. An innovation is the use of velvet revers on coats and jackets after the manner noted in this costume. This coat-dress qualifies admirably as an ideal midsummer costume. Its sheer print guarantees comfort while its modish velvet revers tune to the march of time that leads to fall days.

In the redingote made of fine black lace as portrayed to the right, answer to the midseason dress problem is given in no uncertain terms. A lace redingote such as this may be worn over different dresses converting the simplest frock into a costume of style distinction. For formal wear pose it over a black satin slip. What could make a more charming hostess or dinner gown than the redingote of black lace topping a white cotton pique foundation as here illustrated. The soft pique collar and perky bow lend fetching accents to this costume. You'll love a black lace redingote or jacket over your summer pastel silk crepe frocks. Try out the idea. You will find it well worth while. Separate lace jackets are smart, too, in either black or white.

TYROLEAN JACKET

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

Here is a little indispensable jacket you will want to wear with your culottes or shorts. It is made of white linen bound in bright colors like copen, red, navy or black with silver buttons. It is colorful and has the decorative buttons because it is of Tyrolean inspiration. Much of the fashionable sportswear this season reflects influence of Austrian peasant dress. The outstanding fashion note of this attractive jacket is the hand-quilted Trapunto design at the neck and on the pockets and sleeves. The vogue for hand-quilting is growing into a most outstanding style movement.

Why It Is Castile Soap

Castile soap took its name from Castile, Spain.

GLACE KID IS NEW FALL GLOVE STYLE

The smartest gloves this fall will be "smooth." There is a definite revival, to quote Vogue, "of the firm, moulded hand," possibly following the moulded silhouette, the moulded bust and moulded hips, which will be featured for fall. As the high style leather of the coming season, Paris is consequently sponsoring thin, supple glace kid. It has always been a standby and favorite, but now it is coming up rapidly in the fashion world.

Since three out of the four gloves Molyneux will show with his collection are glace kid, it goes without saying that the smartest women in Paris and this country will adopt the fashion. Fashions, as a whole, are becoming more and more feminine and the glace glove is but a natural result of that trend. Thin, smooth leather is the most flattering a woman can wear. It outlines the shape of her hand and makes her fingers appear long and slender.

Color is again a dominant note. Colored gloves are not going out of style. On the contrary, the fashion will be harnessed to practical, sensible shades, of which some will become almost staples.

Prints and Big Hats

Colorful prints, broad-brimmed hats, and strap pumps with high built-up heels are favorites among outdoor diners at Manhattan's fashionable terrace cafes during the noon hour.

Choosing Corsages

A good principle to follow in selecting a corsage or shoulder bouquet is that the large flowers look best on the tall woman, small ones on a short woman.

A Lovely Frock for Twelves to Twenties

1933-B

Swingin' down the lane with a bit of a zip and a full quota of what it takes, this smartly simple frock goes places without effort—an engagingly youthful and chic affair which can be made in a trice (first cousin to a jiffy) and make you the belle of the campus.

Its simplicity is totally disarming, yet it has all the aplomb of a professor in English — just one of those frocks which can't miss. Delightfully cool and as chipper as a breeze, it requires just seven simple pieces in the making, in any fabric from the A's to the Z's. The yoke and sleeves cut in one and the collar is just long enough to take the prize.

SCHOOL NEWS

Classes met for the first time Monday in the grades and high school of the Klemme Public Schools Short sessions were held in each class, and assignments were given out for the next days work

A total of seventy-one students have registered now in the high school, and a few more are expected to enroll within the next few days At present there are fifteen seniors, seventeen juniors, twenty sophomores and nineteen freshmen

In the grades the present total enrollment is ninety-four, distributed as follows first and second grades, twenty-seven, third and fourth grades, twenty, fifth and sixth grades, twenty-five, seventh and eighth grades, twenty-two.

Some of the new books have arrived and are being sold Other shipments are still on the way and should be here soon

The main change in text books this year is that of the grade geographies A complete new series is being introduced from the third grade through the seventh These books will seem to be a little expensive at first because they are designed for use over two or more years but they are well-bound and people who purchase them should remember that they can be sold for a good price next year or the year following if they are kept in good condition

The entire school was sorry to learn Tuesday that Miss Hansen, our primary teacher, had been called home on account of the accidental death of her brother. He was a student airplane pilot at Waterloo and was killed when his plane crashed

Mrs. E G Schaeffer is taking Miss Hanson's place during her absence

PICK SEED CORN EVEN THOUGH IT IS NUBBINS

Kernels, even though they are odd shaped and on a "nubbin" will make satisfactory open-pollinated seed corn if the ear is sound, disease-free and free from insect damage such as that from the corn earworm.

With open-pollinated seed corn, the best that the farmer can obtain from a drouth-injured field will probably be just as good seed as that from normal well-filled ears.

Although the corn condition in southern Iowa is not as good as that in the northern half of the state, it will be more satisfactory to select adapted seed in that area rather than to plant northern Iowa srains in the southern section next year.

Pick seed corn when the kernels are well dented and see that it is carefully dried and stored so early freezes will not injure its germination. Many Iowa farmers lost good seed corn last year by not having it dried and stored before it was caught by the early freezing weather.

Visitors to Klemme's Fall Celebration, a big event on Friday and Saturday, October 2 and 3, will, perhaps, be more interested in the famous Gould family and their big Revues than any other part of the big entertainment program presented by Jay Gould's Million dollar Spectacle This talented family, made up of Mr and Mrs Gould, their three sons, six lovely daughters, two daughter-in-laws, three sons-in-law and seven grand children, will put on a Million Dollar Gen Revue each evening and their program changes daily

Thru their years of vast experience this family show has shown a big improvement annually and now with the assistance of their stage band, marvelous stage setting, beautiful lighting effects, perfect sound system and extra helpers they can stage a truly big time performance

The new enlarged stage setting and scenic effects are a beautiful sight to behold The whole scenic width runs a full sixty feet and the setting has a 35-ft stage opening that runs over 20-ft. in height No indoor theatre could present the charm that this outdoor stage has in the evening with the colorful lighting system, footlights, side clusters and spots, vieing with nature's own lofty overhead Added to this Gould's lovely tableaux and special scenes can be presented

It is impossible to set down here a complete list of the many units presented by Gould's Million Dollar Gems, but some of the outstanding are listed "Fashions in Flowerland," the most beautiful in scenic dances and costumes of fascinating Cuba "Dance of Humming Birds," the most intricate of the group "Magical Maids," dancing maids try to outdo Houdini with real tricks and illusions "The Marx Brothers in the Ring," a clever impersonation of the madcap comedians expertly done by the 3 Gould brothers "Parade of the Soldierettes," military costumes & music makes this a stirring number. "26th Century Rocket Ship," takes you 600 years ahead of our time and is a distinct novelty

"Where did you get that Hat?" a take-off on Laurel & Hardy by Jay Jr and George Gould that is decidedly entertaining "Rhythm of the West," a ten-strike in entertainment is this new cowboy act which has everything including horses. "Ole and Inga," a new Scandinavian comedy team you will want to see and hear.

"Toymakers Dream Orchestra," in which the orchestra boys prove they can play toy instruments as well as real ones, a real treat for the kids. "On A Bicycle Built For Two," famed for their old-fashioned numbers, the Gould's have outdone themselves in producing this one, their best by far. "The Man on the Flying Trapeze," the comedy highlight of the whole program for here is a play enacted in its entirety by the orchestra boys Yes, they play the feminine roles also and it is all in music. Added to this list is a full assortment of acrobatic and tap dancing, musical novelties, songs, orchestra music that go to round out well planned programs. Get ready, grocer, butcher and baker, the Gould family is on its way to Klemme for two big days, Friday and Saturday, October 2 and 3, And don't forget, it's All Free

Hello Everybody

"The Skulls and the Altar"

By FLOYD GIBBONS.

AN' it's a yarn from old Ireland we're havin' today, an' it'll be Jack Boyd of New York city, that's a-tellin' of it. It happened in November, 1916, long before Jack was ever afther comin' to this country, and when he was on a ten-day leave from the trenches of France an' havin' a bit of a dlirink at a pub in the village of Moyne.

In any other country, Jack might have finished his drink and gone his way. But there's something about the "ould sod" that makes it a favorite roosting place for Old Lady Adventure. Maybe the gal was born there.

Anyway, she keeps things humming in that neck of the woods. It's a rare Irishman that can go through a day without having something happen to him.

At a table on the other side of the room were two men. They looked like prosperous farmers—landed gentry they call them over there on the other side—and they had stopped talking a couple of times to stare at Jack. Jack didn't know either one of them. He was visiting some friends and had never been in the neighborhood before. But after a while one of the men came walking over to his table.

John and Pat Were a Couple of Old Sports.

The men's names, Jack learned later, were John and Pat. This one was John. He sat down and asked Jack if he'd just come from France. Jack said he had. And the next remark sort of took Jack by surprise. "How would you like to earn ten pounds?" John asked him.

John and Pat looked like a couple of old sports but just the same, ten pounds is a lot of money in Ireland. Jack said he'd make no answer until he knew what he had to do to earn the money. Then sporty old John unfolded as fantastic a set of conditions as ever he had heard in his life.

"Two miles up the river," John said, "there is an old deserted abbey, undermined with caves. There's a tower in the middle of it, about a hundred feet high. At the bottom of that tower is a room with an altar in it. The good monks used to pray there, but since Cromwell's time the abbey has been abandoned, and now it is used as a burial place.

Sentinels of the Ruined Abbey Were the Dead.

"At the foot of that altar there are six human skulls. I want to know if you have the courage to go there tonight at one o'clock, get one of those skulls and bring it here to me tomorrow. That's all you've got to do," John said—and then he looked sort of queerly at Jack as he added, "There are no keepers or watchmen, and nobody will know what has happened—but the Dead."

But the Dead! Jack didn't like the way he said that. But ten pounds was a lot of money. It would buy him many a pack of fags—many a bottle of cognac—when he got back to the front. He looked John straight in the eye. "Are you on the level?" he asked. "I am," said John. "All right," said Jack, "I'll do it."

That night Jack took his service revolver and started for the abbey. He reached it about quarter of one. At one o'clock sharp he swung aside the rusty old gate and made his way through dank, dark passages to the room below the tower.

Weird Lights Flash in the Abandoned Tomb.

It was spooky in there with the moonlight showing through the cracks and casting weird shadows on the gray stone walls. For the first time in his life he found himself wondering if maybe there wasn't some truth in ghost stories.

He was walking toward the altar, when suddenly he saw something that froze him stiff in his tracks. Two pale yellow lights, about the size of plates were dancing about the altar. "My hair stood up," he says, "and my courage ran out of me like water out of a bottle. A bat flicked my face, and I almost dropped my gun. Trembling like a leaf I sat down on a grave and watched those lights dance. Then I coughed, and in two seconds I heard that same cough in another part of the abbey."

Jack walked firmly toward the altar. He wasn't afraid of anything in the world now. There was only one light playing about now. The other was on his face.

Sepulchral Voice Warns Intruder Away.

He raised his gun, rested it on his left forearm and took careful aim at the beam that was shining in his eyes. He pulled the trigger twice. There were two sharp cracks—a terrible clatter of broken glass—a loud, reverberating echo. He thought, "Now is my time," and bent to pick up one of the skulls. Suddenly a hollow voice said "LEAVE THAT ALONE. IT DOESN'T BELONG TO YOU!"

For an instant Jack began to tremble again. He put down the skull and picked up another. "LEAVE THAT ALONE," the voice repeated. "IT DOESN'T BELONG TO YOU!" He picked up three more. Each time that warning voice.

"But by this time," says Jack, "I was getting mad. I shouted out, 'To hell with you, whoever you are They don't belong to you either.' And with that I picked up the sixth skull and walked toward the gate, firing right and left from my revolver till it was empty."

It Was Just a Merry Prank of John and Pat.

If the story had ended there, Jack wouldn't have believed it himself. Two or three times on the way home he pinched himself to see if he was dreaming. But the next day when he went with the skull to the pub, there were John and Pat. John's right hand was in a bandage, and he grinned and tossed Jack a ten pound note.

"Pat and I had a hundred pound bet," he said, "that no man would take a skull from that altar. When you took us up we both hid in the abbey.

"We had two mirrors that reflected the moonlight, and that's what made those dancing beams. But I didn't figure on your shooting, son. You drilled me right through the palm of the hand. Anyhow, you won me a hundred pounds. Good-by, son, and good luck to you."

"Bumping," Boat Racing

More than a hundred years ago the British evolved a type of boat racing which is peculiar to their own country. This is called "bumping." It began in 1815 at Oxford and was later copied by Cambridge and other universities and schools. The reason for this type of race was that not many of the rivers going through college towns were wide enough for several boats to race alongside. The solution was to develop some sort of single-file racing which would be fair to every boat taking part.

History of Yarmouth

The history of Yarmouth, southwest gateway to Nova Scotia, is bound up in the history of the sea, and it goes back far beyond the days when white men began settling in the new world in the Sixteenth century, for at Yarmouth is a Runic stone, which scholars say was inscribed in 1001 by Lief Erikson. The inscription on this stone is interpreted as reading, "Lief to Eric Raises" (this monument) Lief Erikson having dedicated it to his father, Erik the Red, ruler of Greenland.

Washington. — As the political campaign waxes warmer, it becomes painfully evident that the fight in 1936 for the suffrage of the people is going to be very dirty. It is going to be bitter and there is no way now apparent that such a characteristic can be avoided.

Mud Slinging Ahead

I do not believe that either Governor Landon, the Republican candidate, or President Roosevelt, seeking re-election as a Democrat, can prevent the hurling of invectives that are going to be very close to mud-slinging. Naturally the President of the United States seldom makes a mud-slinging speech and Governor Landon personally is a mild-mannered man who believes in discussing issues rather than individuals, but the intentions or the desires of these two candidates cannot control the bitterness that is, to my mind, certain to be found in this campaign in a large measure.

As typical of the sort of thing to which I have referred is the recent speech of Secretary Ickes who, in a national radio broadcast, became quite ill-tempered in his attack on Governor Landon. Mr. Ickes is not known for his composure anyway and when he gets heated up on any subject he is likely to be guilty of remarks that are not becoming to an official of our government or any other.

I have not the slightest doubt that before the campaign has proceeded much further there will be similar speeches attacking Mr. Roosevelt personally and that, while Governor Landon may not approve, there will be unworthy charges hurled at the President.

Mr. Ickes skated pretty close to the line in his attack on Governor Landon by various adroit phrases which were designed to create the impression that the Republican candidate was either ignorant or dishonest. I do not know Governor Landon personally but I can offer this thought: No man is going to be nominated by any political party in a national convention, nominated by acclamation, unless his record is pretty clear. For Mr. Ickes to say, therefore, in effect, that Governor Landon had sold out to "Wall Street" was not the sort of campaign discussion likely to produce confidence among all the people in their government. It is comparable, in my opinion, to a charge that the President of the United States, who advertises himself continually as a friend of the common man, was guilty of increasing his own personal fortune through presidential acts—and every one knows this is not true. But to get back to the theme song of the Ickes' speech, it seems to me that the tragedy of his radio pronouncement lies in the fact throughout his discussion he was preaching class hatred. Every one knows, of course, attacks on "Wall Street" are very common in any political campaign. The demagogues use it every hour of every day everywhere they can find any one to listen to them. It is ridiculous, but it has happened for a good many years.

I have seen indications of a reaction against the Ickes' speech in another way. John Hamilton, the Republican national chairman, on his recent organization tour of the western states, propounded the inquiry that seeks to identify the "economic royalists" about which President Roosevelt spoke several weeks ago. If the Roosevelt campaigners continue this class hatred propaganda, I rather suspect from what Mr. Hamilton said in his speeches there will be a perfect barrage of demands to know the names of these economic royalists. It may not seem important; indeed, it seems like it probably is inconsequential, but if the Republicans let down a barrage on the President of the United States, he is likely to be put in a bad corner.

May Cause Showdown

Without attempting to forecast what the Republican opposition is likely to say, I can recall as an observer close to the wheels of government during the Roosevelt regime that Mr. Roosevelt frequently was a guest on the Astor yacht and that one of his chief advisors for many months was the multimillionaire, Bernard M. Baruch. It seems also that a very rich man, Henry L. Doherty, was in charge of the nation-wide dance program held on the President's birthday and Mr. Doherty, be it said, is head of one of the great utility chains.

These are just samples. It may be good politics for the President to encourage these attacks without approving them, but those of us who knew the late Louis McHenry Howe, are convinced that he never would have agreed to that sort of attack, had he been alive and serving as the President's closest political advisor as he did for a quarter of a century.

There is a situation in the federal government that threatens to be quite nasty. I refer to the row that has developed between the Department of Justice bureau of investigation (the G-men) and the Treasury's secret service corps. It is all very much under cover, quite secret, but the row has come to the surface sufficiently to result in a demotion of two long-time members of the secret service.

Probe G-Men

J. Edgar Hoover has been well press-agented as chief of the G-men. Joseph E. Murphy has had almost no advertising as assistant chief of the Treasury secret service in which he has served for more than a quarter of a century. Mr. Murphy and one of his subordinates have been reduced in rank, their record stained for life.

The two departments have kept the facts well covered up. It seems that something was going on among the G-men that the Treasury secret service thought they ought to know about. They conducted their own inquiry, their own investigation into the other staff of investigators. That is as much as has been made public except Secretary Morgenthau's announcement of the demotion order. I have known each of these men equally twenty years. Each is entitled to the utmost respect. But each operates along an entirely different line—Hoover with some willingness for publicity; Murphy with an absolute policy of never letting his name get into the papers. It is unfortunate that Joe Murphy was the goat.

The board of governors of the Federal Reserve system took an action recently that probably is quite mystifying to the average person. They ordered all of the banks of the country which are members of the Federal Reserve system to keep a deposit reserve with the Federal Reserve banks 15 per cent greater than ever has been required before.

Action Mystifies

With the technical phases of reserve requirements and the mechanical operation of this particular order, I think we need not be very much concerned. But with the principle upon which this action is taken I think every one with a bank account, however small, ought to be vitally interested. They ought to be interested for the very simple reason that this action illustrates better than any words I can write how far the centralization of control of the banking structure has gone. This action was taken under the National Banking act of 1935, a statute that has been frequently criticised as a "political banking act."

In the instance I have just reported, the change in the reserve requirements probably will have no serious reaction on us as individuals. It probably will not hurt the banks because few banks in the country have had calls for loans in any quantity since business is at such a low level. But the point is that under this law, the Federal Reserve board of governors can alter banking conditions over night. It can issue new rules and regulations that are wholly impossible of understanding by the average individual, but which are almost riotous in their effect upon the management of individual banks throughout the country.

To state this proposition in another way, may I describe it in the terms of a private business enterprise. If a storekeeper in a small town were subjected to regulation from Washington and the regulatory power in the federal government had such discretionary authority as the Federal Reserve board of governors, could that storekeeper ever feel that he was managing his own business? I think not.

Old Women Dance on Fire on St. Konstantine's Day

Old women dance on red hot embers every summer in the village of Vulgari, south-east Bulgaria, according to a writer in Pearson's Weekly.

These women are called "nestinarki." They are devout Christians, and their patron saints are St. Konstantine and St. Elena.

On St. Konstantine's day the peasants make a huge bonfire of logs in the village square. And while it is blazing up the "nestinarki" begin their fire dance procession

This is led by villagers bearing ikons of St. Elena and St. Konstantine. To the drone of bagpipes the old women dance to a weird rhythmic melody, their bodies trembling as if in a palsy.

The villagers gather round the bonfire. Then the "nestinarki," barefooted, dance for several minutes on the glowing embers.

"19 Days Hath September . . ."

"THIRTY days hath September . . ." Thus runs the familiar jingle, but it wasn't true in the year 1752 when Great Britain (and her American colonies) adopted the Gregorian calendar. In that year, the month had only 19 days.

But let James Franklin in his "Poor Job's Almanac" (an imitation of his brother, Benjamin Franklin's "Poor Richard's Almanac"), tell it:

Kind Reader: You have now such a year as you never saw before, nor will see hereafter, the King and Parliament of Great Britain having thought proper to enact that the month of September, 1752, shall contain but nineteen days, which will shorten this year eleven days, and have extended the same throughout the British dominions; so that we are not to have two beginnings to our years, but the first of January is to be the first day and the first month of the year 1752.

Eleven days are taken from September, and begin, 1, 2, 14, 15, etc. Be not astonished, nor look with concern, Dear Reader, at such a deduction of days, nor regret as for the loss of so much time, but take this for your consolation, that your expenses will perhaps appear lighter, and your mind be more at ease. And what an indulgence is here for those who love their pillows, to lie down in peace on the second of this month, and not perhaps awake or be disturbed till the fourteenth, in the morning.

And, Reader, this is not to hasten the payment of debts, freedom of apprentices or servants, or the coming to age of minors; but the number of natural days in all agreements are to be fulfilled. All Church Holidays and Courts are to be on the same nominal days, and so deemed to be held eleven days later. Now, Reader, since 'tis likely you may never have such another year nor such another almanac, I would advise you to improve the one for your own sake, and I recommend the other for the sake of your friend, Poor Job.

Palindrome

THE man glanced idly at the automobile that had drawn up to the curb, then leaned forward for a closer look. "The perfect palindrome!" he murmured.

"Palindrome?" queried his companion. "Never heard of that make of car. "Let's see—P-i-e-r-c-e-A-r-r-o-w—why, that doesn't spell Palindrome."

"Look at the state license tag," was the reply. "It's ALA. 36163. Both the abbreviation of the state and the number read backward the same as forward. Such things are called palindromes. Plenty automobiles from other states have numbers that are the same backward as forward, but in Alabama is the only place where you can have the perfect palindrome—name of the state and number—on your license tag."

To have been an even more "perfect palindrome" that car should have been driven by a man named Bob accompanied by a girl named Hannah or Anna. Perhaps, though, a person should "name no one man" in discussing this subject. No doubt there are other names that have that characteristic.

In fact, the history of palindromes goes back to the Garden of Eden. The first woman pointed to herself and uttered one word: "Eve." Whereupon, the first man is said to have replied palindromatically, "Madam, I'm Adam!"

Play On and With Words

ONCE upon a time a preacher from Hartford, Conn., was called upon to give the opening prayer at a session of the state house of representatives and immediately afterwards listened to the debate over a divorce case. (In those days the Connecticut legislature could grant divorces and was noted for its readiness to do so).

Struck by the irony of the fact that he, who performed marriages, should be witnessing this "unmarrying process," the preacher composed these lines.

For cut-ting all connect-ions famed,
Connect-i-cut is fairly named;
I twain connect in one, but you
Cut those whom I connect in two.
Each legislator seems to say,
What you Connect I cut away.

When two men named Willing and Schott fought a duel in Philadelphia some wag composed this:

Schott and Willing did engage
In duel fierce and hot;
Schott shot Willing willingly,
And Willing he shot Schott.
The shot Schott shot made Willing quite
A spectacle to see;
While Willing's willing shot went right
Through Schott's anatomy.

Lowest-Pitched Sound

The lowest-pitched sound used in music is the lowest note on a few of the greater organs, which vibrates at 16 times a second. Machinery often makes sounds still lower in pitch than this, but these are usually felt as vibrations rather than heard as sounds. The highest-pitched note of the most complete type of piano vibrates 5,120 times a second; higher by two tones or about 500 vibrations per second than the shrillest note of the piccolo.

Feathers Always Popular

There is, perhaps, no period of history in which feather fans were not used; feathers were primitive man's favorite decorations, and an outspread wing or a cluster of tail feathers is a natural fan.

Derivation of "Iris" Cited

The word "iris," the flower, the same word also standing for part of the human eye, together with the word "iridescent," come from the Greek goddess Iris, whose outer form was the rainbow.

MADRID, the Spanish capital; San Sebastian, Spain's swanky resort where the American ambassador mers; Toledo, that inland Spantown of oriental atmosphere, Barcelona, teeming Mediterean port, have been thrust into spotlight recently by political urbances.

The western bluff supports a new lighthouse, beside the abandoned one, now an observation tower On the eastern mountain stands a substantial Spanish castle, less associated with dreams than with nightmares of siege.

A distinctive atmosphere survives in the Old Town. In this Basque fishing settlement, at the foot of Mt. Urgull, dark nets dry along the wharves and laundry hangs from windows of the narrow, five and six-storied houses. Nearby the ancient church of Santa Maria wears a white-sailed ship above its doorway to show kinship with its parishioners who must go down to the sea in ships.

Toledo Looks Moorish

Toledo occupies the crest of a hill rising nearly 200 feet from the Tagus river, 47 miles southwest of Madrid. When the catapult was the modern engine of war, it was almost impregnable. The Tagus formed an admirable moat on the south, east and west sides; and the neck of land on the north stretching toward a fertile plain was protected by the plurality of walls that surrounded the city.

It is difficult to imagine that within less than two hours' train ride from the Spanish capital, there is a city with marked oriental appearance. The Puente de Alcantara, the principal gateway to Toledo on the east, is of Moorish design with massive high towers at each end. It was built in the Thirteenth century.

From the time one steps upon this bridge, until the river is recrossed by way of the Puente de San Martin, dating back fifty years earlier than the Puente de Alcantara, the many relics and ruins of medieval days in Toledo give a flavor of Palestine and Arabia, with a touch of French Gothic here and there.

The road approaching the city from the bridge winds around the hill past the Hospital de Santa Cruz, a Fifteenth century building, and then through a Moorish archway that was nearly 400 years old when Columbus discovered America. It leads to the public square which still retains its Moorish name—the Zocodover. The "square" is really a triangle with one slightly round side. A wall of balconied buildings surrounds it, pierced at frequent intervals by narrow cobblestone streets hardly wide enough for two Toledo donkey carts to pass. There are narrow sidewalks but few pedestrians use them.

Toward the middle of the city, the lofty but graceful tower of Toledo Cathedral rises above the housetops. The narrow, winding streets in the neighborhood, bordered by unattractive buildings, do not permit a full view of the edifice. It is a splendid example of French-Gothic architecture with carved monuments, stained glass and tracery work comparable with that of other European cathedrals. It covers about the same area as that of Cologne cathedral and took 266 years to build. The foundation stone was laid in 1227.

Busy Old Barcelona

Barcelona is modern in appearance, although the port dates to the Second century and ranked with Genoa and Venice in Mediterranean trade in the Middle Ages.

The spacious harbor into which the Phoenicians sailed in quest of new peoples with whom to trade, and which Columbus triumphantly entered after his return from America, now is pierced by long, modern wharves, each accommodating several large ocean - going vessels at a time.

The old quay, now well paved, is lined on its inner side with modern buildings and a promenade flanked by two rows of palm trees occupies its center.

The old part of the city, once surrounded by a wall, still has some of its canyonlike streets and balconied windows of bordering buildings nearly meet. But many of these crooked lanes now open into wide streets.

Barcelona has a magnificent Gothic cathedral, a university, many historic churches, museums, and new buildings of pure "Barcelona architecture, the lines of which simulate ocean waves, but the out-door life of the inhabitants is the lure of the Spanish city.

Honor Dead at Vimy
Spanish War Pitiless
Russia Aids Loyalists
Hitler Watches Spain

The dedication of the magnificent war monument, designed by a Canadian artist, recently unveiled by the king of England in memory of the Canadian soldiers that fell at Vimy Ridge, is important to all our friends north of the boundary in Canada. It will interest, also, all Americans that were sent abroad in that famous fight, with which we had nothing to do except lose our men and our money. American soldiers, who liked the Canadian and Australian troops better than any others they met, according to statements made by many, testify to the courage with which the colonial Englishmen fought at Vimy Ridge and elsewhere.

Arthur Brisbane

Statistics of the war show that, on the side of the allies, the percentage of death was higher among the Canadians than among any other troops involved, excepting the French themselves, who fought at their own frontiers to defend their own homes.

Sixty thousand Canadians lie buried, each one an "unknown soldier," around that great monument. The king of England, after a long and really admirable speech of appreciation, lowered the flags that hid the monument which, as he said, will forever honor the courage of the Canadians that fought and that lie dead and buried.

The war that killed so many millions, blowing them to pieces, leaving them to die shattered and agonizing on the battlefield; suffocating, making them insane with the poison gas just coming into fashion, seemed between 1914 and 1918 as horrible as any war could be.

But the civil war, the worst, most savage, pitiless and ferocious of all wars, now going on in Spain, makes the big war comparatively mild.

Lord Rothermere's London Daily Mail eclipses in the horror of one published statement all stories of horror in the war and goes beyond anything that could possibly be believed.

When the French newspaper, the Friend of the People, described fighters for Madrid's radical government digging up and throwing from their graves the bodies of Catholic nuns, that horror seems beyond belief.

But Lord Rothermere's newspaper prints the statement that other nuns ALIVE were seized—three of them—their clothing saturated with gasoline, and burned to death. The Daily Mail also quotes the statement that in the city of Barcelona, when the radical forces had conquered the rebellious insurgent inhabitants, "any Catholic priest in the city was butchered without mercy."

Russia is, according to reliable reports, in constant communication with the Madrid government by radio.

Newspapers in England, and the more conservative newspapers in France, declare that Russia, in addition to advising Madrid concerning the immediate civil war and helping the Spanish government by the purchase of Spanish bonds, is also sending by radio detailed information as to the organization in Spain of a "Soviet government" similar to that existing in Russia.

France, thanks to the existing alliance with Russia — resented by many of the old-fashioned Frenchmen, who ask, "Is Stalin the real ruler of France?"—is under pressure from Russia to help the Madrid government against the insurgents.

If Spain should become really sovietized, under the guidance of Russia, the Spanish peninsula would be practically a branch and a dependency of Soviet Russia at the southwest corner of Europe.

Russia, whose planes have been taking information on manufacturing poison gas and building factories to the nations that are friendly to her in central Europe, might build up a chain of Communist states too powerful even for the dictator governments of Italy and Germany, and the remaining "democratic" government of Great Britain. It is not a happy time for Europeans, or for any interested in Europe's future peace and welfare.

Hitler is reported on the point of siding with the Spanish insurgents against the radical Madrid regime, because of savage attacks made on Nazi officers in Spain. It is reported that a woman in charge of the Hitler office was threatened with death if she would not reveal the whereabouts of her principal; dragged into the streets, her dress was soaked with gasoline. An interruption prevented applying the match.

The simplicity but irresistible charm of princess frocks accounts for their undiminished popularity and appeal for those who sew, and this one will make an instant hit with the mothers of growing daughters as well as with the daughters themselves. Slightly fitted at the waist to accent the mild flare of the skirt, this pretty and petite princess model goes together like a charm, the result of a minimum of effort and expense. ## BEWARE OF IMPORTED ALFALFA AND RED CLOVER

"Don't buy imported red clover or alfalfa seed unless you are sure it is winter hardy," warns H D Hughes, Iowa State College agronomist

Because of the small amount of red clover and alfalfa seed produced in the Corn Belt this year, large amounts of imported seed is being offered for sale but most of it will not withstand the rigors of an Iowa winter

Argentina Seed Not Hardy

Argentina alfalfa seed is being imported extensively, but it has been shown definitely that none of the Argentine-produced seed is sufficiently hardy to withstand Iowa conditions Large amounts of Arizona alfalfa seed are being offered seedsmen at comparatively low prices but professor Hughes advises farmers and seedsmen to buy only "verified origin" seed which has been produced in some northern state

Alfalfa seed of verified origin bears a red white and blue tag which is authorized by the United States Department of Agriculture and indicates the state in which the seed was grown

Inferior Clover Seed

Ten or 15 years ago there was an average of 12 million pounds of red clover seed imported but tests by the U S Department of Agriculture have shown that this seed is very inferior for use in Iowa.

Imported red clover seed is stained various colors according to its origin That from Italy or of unknown origin is stained 10 percent red while that from countries other than Italy is stained 1 per cent green Either of these is entirely unsuitable for Iowa and should not be purchased under any circumstance

If buying imported seed, only that from Canada, stained 1 percent violet should be bought Any red clover seed produced in the United States except that from Oregon is unapproved for planting in Iowa

Poor Bear Bigger Tax Load: Landon

Urges Honest Bookkeeping in Buffalo Speech; Warns of Federal Waste.

BUFFALO, N. Y.—Gov. Alf M. Landon of Kansas charged the Roosevelt administration with increasing by 25 per cent the share of the cost of government falling mainly on persons of incomes of $25 a week or less, in a speech delivered before a crowd of 25,000 persons here.

He deplored wasteful spending and deficits, with their increased burden of hidden taxes, and declared, "The time has come when we must establish a system of simple, honest bookkeeping."

"We must remember," he said, "that every time the government spends a dollar, that dollar will have to be paid by our children."

The Republican Presidential candidate reiterated his belief in direct taxes levied on the net incomes of individuals and corporations as a means of charging everyone his fair share of the cost of government and letting him know what that share is.

Taxes Hit Low Incomes.

"In the year 1932, 59 cents out of every dollar collected by our federal government was secured from direct taxes," said Gov. Landon. "The other 41 cents was collected from indirect and hidden taxes.

"Four years later what do we find? We find that 51 cents out of every dollar collected by the federal government came from hidden taxes. In other words, the share of the cost of government falling mainly on those with incomes of $25 a week or less has increased 25 per cent during the three years of the present administration. They are paying far more than their rightful share of the cost of government."

G. O. P. for Relief.

Gov. Landon likened the New Deal party's policy of spending double its income to the familiar character of the neighbor who buys more than he can afford, and eventually "winds up on the rocks"

"The Republican party believes in being generous in the spending of money for relief and emergency purposes, but it believes that these funds should be spent without waste and absurdities," he said.

Politics Keeps Dakota Cattle Dry, Says 'Ding'

Washington, D. C.—How politics has denied water to Dakota cattle during the drouth was described by Jay N. Darling, known affectionately to millions as "Ding" the cartoonist, when he was interviewed on the William Hard radio hour. Until recently "Ding" was chief of the bureau of biological survey of the department of agriculture.

"The bureau of biological survey," said Mr. Darling, "made a careful survey for the New Deal administration of the water resources of North Dakota. A program of impounded water reservoirs to hold all the water that might fall in good years and bad was completed

"But," continued Mr. Darling, "the relief money for North Dakota was handed over to political administrators for distribution, and the scientific men who had prepared the water conservation program were told that the only way in which they could secure the authorization of their projects was to apply to these politicians. The result has been that the only water available in North Dakota in this year of excessive drouth is to be found in the few ponds — very few — which the biological survey was able to construct out of some stray moneys on which it managed to lay its hands."

William Hard's Hour.

Chicago.—The radio division of the Republican National committee announced that the program, "News for Voters" would in the future be known as "William Hard's Hour". It is heard nightly, from Monday to Friday, over the NBC coast-to-coast Blue network at 9:00 P. M., EST, except on Wednesdays when it is heard at 8:45 P. M., EST.

SUPERINTENDENT'S LETTER

The editor of the Times has kindly consented to give me a portion of the space reserved for the school notes each week to use in my own way in interpreting our school to the public I will do my best to make this column a regular weekly feature. It the editor decides, however, that it is a "weakly" feature, he will ask to have it discontinued.

One of the purposes of this column will be to let the parents of school children know what we are expecting of these children at school. Sometimes without intending to, children take home a distorted account of happenings at school Perhaps a direct word to the public will help to clear up some of these misunderstandings

Another purpose of our article will be to suggest to parents ways in which they themselves can cooperate with us in making our work effective and efficient We sincerely believe that most of the parents will meet us more than half way in any help we ask of them if we will only give them a clear understanding of what we are trying to do

This week I am going to launch out into troublesome territory I am going to speak plainly about the matter of absences. The large number of these absences were of school has been the one disappointing feature at the start of our year's work

When a student is absent, he cuts down the efficiency of the school in three ways In the first place, he puts himself behind, in the second place, he puts the class behind, and in the third place he puts the teacher behind Every absence makes it necessary for the teacher to take time out to bring the student up to date so that the class can advance, and, until that student is again doing the same work as his classmates, the progress of everyone is retarded.

This situation could undoubtedly be translated into dollars and cents. The amount of school tax money wasted through the inefficiency due to absences would be alarming if the figures could be placed before the public. We have no figures that have been worked out on a statististical basis for our own school, but let us look at a hypothetical case.

The annual tax levy in this district for operation of our school is $10,000 Neighboring districts pay in about $3000 each year. There are 180 school days in the year. A simple division shows us that the daily appropriation for operating our school is about seventy-two dollars. That is the amount of money wasted by the time absences have caused all classes to be retarded one day in their work, and that doesn't take very long when the absences are numerous

Here is another way to look at it—still from the financial point of view If the daily cost of operating the school is seventy-two, then, with 165 pupils enrolled, the daily average cost per pupil is about forty-four cents. Last year thruout the school there were 1601 absences That means that on 1601 pupil days the educational opportunities provided at the rate of fourty-four cents per day were not taken advantage of This figures out to be a loss of over $700.

Of course last year was a banner year for all absences in all schools on account of the weather, and, to a certain extent, this reasoning might not be fair; but a surprising number of these abcenses were during good weather.

We have had no bad weather during the first week of school this year, and our absences are starting out at approximately the same rate as last year We must have the cooperation of the parents in checking this costly and undesirable situation.

Because of the fact that we want to make unnecessary absences unpopular, we have adopted a ruling throughout the school that only three (or at the most four) types of absences are to be considered excusable (An excusable absence is one for which credit can be given for work made up.) The excusable ones are as follows:

1 Sickness of the pupil.

2 Serious sickness or death in the family.

3 The absolue necessity of the pupil's staying at home to work

4 A few other very special cases such as a wedding of a brother or sister, the excusability of which will be determined by the superintendent.

This ruling means that a students grades will suffer greatly in event of an unexcused absence. For this reason, for the sake of economy, and for the pride which everyone should have in the records of our school, let us all work together toward a better showing in attendance for the coming year.

Sincerely yours,

W. Henry Galbreth, Supt.

"GERONIMO SURRENDERS!" —OUR INDIAN WARS END

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

FIFTY years ago this month our Indian wars came to an end. On September 4, 1886, Geronimo, the Apache, formally surrendered to Gen. Nelson A. Miles and that surrender marked the close of a bitter conflict between the red and white races which had been carried on intermittently for more than two centuries and a half.

It had begun away back in 1622 when Chief Opechancanough and his Powhatan warriors had attacked the little settlement of Jamestown in Virginia and killed a number of his inhabitants.

GEN. NELSON A. MILES

Opechancanough was the first of the great chieftains who tried to stem the tide of white invasion of this country. He was to be followed by others in the same futile effort. King Philip, the Wampanoag, tried it and was killed in the trying, as Opechancanough had been. Pontiac, the Ottawa, sought to do it by a confederation of tribes and failed. Little Turtle, the Miami, dreamed the dream of Pontiac until it was shattered under the thundering hoofs of "Mad Anthony" Wayne's dragoons at the Battle of Fallen Timbers. Tecumseh, the Shawnee, also attempted to rally the tribesmen to a concerted resistance to the hated palefaces but his attempt went the way of Pontiac's and Little Turtle's. Osceola, the Seminole, Black Hawk, the Sauk, and Sitting Bull and Crazy Horse of the Sioux strove mightily to hold the land of their fathers against the invaders but they, too, failed.

So for 250 years the white man and the Indian made war on each other and then made peace. Then one or the other broke faith and the whole sorry business of treachery and revenge and slaughter of the innocent as well as the guilty was taken up again.

Of all the Indian tribes who tried to resist American attempts to "civilize" them, none put up a longer or more desperate struggle against that doubtful blessing than the Apaches of the Southwest. The series of wars with them began as far back as 1835 when the treachery of an American trader and the inexcusable killing by his men of a party of Apaches taught their tribesmen to distrust the Americans just as they had learned to distrust the Spaniards three centuries earlier.

Son of a Chief

At about the time the first collision between the Americans and the Apaches took place a Nedni Apache warrior named Taklishim was living near the headwaters of the Gila river in Arizona. Taklishim was the son of Chief Maco of the Nedni but since he had married a Bedonkohe Apache woman and joined her tribe, he lost his right to rule as hereditary chief of the Nedni.

To them was born a son who would become the most famous of all Apache leaders even though he was never recognized as hereditary chief. He was given the name of Go-khla-yeh or Go - yath - lay, which means "The Yawner," but in the future his would be a name of fear in the Southwest—Geronimo. Some imaginative writers have declared that Geronimo means "Devil Saint" but the fact is that it is only the Spanish for "Jerome" and was applied to this Apache as a nickname by the Mexicans. However, it was easy enough to believe that "Devil Saint" and "Apache Devil" were synonymous terms when Geronimo, at the height of his career, was the scourge of New Mexico, Arizona and parts of Old Mexico.

Good Reason to Hate

There is no doubt but that an unprovoked attack upon Geronimo's people by the Mexicans gave him ample cause to hate the men of that nation. Whether or not he was equally justified in his hatred for the Americans is more questionable. Certainly the unjustified murder of Mangus-Colorado, who became chief of the Bedonkohe Apaches after the death of Chief Maco, and the indignities suffered by Cochise, chief of the Chokonen (Chiricahua) Apaches, were not calculated to endear Americans, either military or civilian, to any Indian of that tribe. At any rate, Geronimo seems to have been an apt pupil of Cochise in the art of hating the white men and, in the art of making war on them, he added a few ideas of his own to those which his predecessors had contributed.

In 1876, as a result of depredations committed in the state of Sonora, Mexico, which brought strong complaints from the Mexican government, the United States authorities decided to remove the Chiricahuas (the term commonly used for both the Bedonkohe and the real Chiricahuas) from the reservation which they occupied on the southern frontier to San Carlos, Arizona. Geronimo, who was then coming into prominence as a war leader, immediately fled to Mexico. Later when he returned with his band to Ojo Caliente, N. M. he was arrested by John P. Clum, the Apache agent at San Carlos, and taken back to that reservation.

There Geronimo and his people settled down as peaceful tillers of the soil and so long as Clum was their agent they caused no trouble. But when he resigned and his hand was no longer guiding the Apaches, discontent sprang up. The failure of the government to help them irrigate their lands aggravated the trouble and resulted in Geronimo's jumping the reservation and leading a raid into Sonora again. Then followed the campaign of 1882-83 against the Apaches under the leadership of Gen. George A. Crook which ended in the capture of Geronimo's band in the Sierra Madre mountains and their return to San Carlos once more.

For the next two years the Chiricahuas remained quietly at San Carlos but in 1884 trouble arose when the authorities attempted to stop the Apache practice of making tizwin, a strong intoxicant. As a result, Geronimo and Naiche, or Natchez, son of Cochise and hereditary chief of the Chiricahua, again decamped from San Carlos and started a reign of red terror in southern Arizona and New Mexico and in Sonora and Chihuahua, Mexico. Again General Crook marched against the hostiles with instructions to capture or destroy them.

A Hard Campaign

After a long and difficult campaign over the blazing deserts of the Southwest and among the rocky fastnesses of the mountains, a truce was arranged in March, 1886, followed by a conference at which the terms of surrender of the Apaches were agreed upon. But before it could be concluded, Geronimo, and Naiche fled with their followers into the Sierra Madres. Worn out by his exertions and feeling keenly the implied criticism by his superiors of his failure to conquer Geronimo's warriors, Crook asked to be relieved of his command in that department.

His successor was Gen. Nelson A. Miles, who as colonel of the Fifth infantry had made a brilliant record as an Indian fighter against the tribes of the southern plains in 1874-75, the Sioux and Cheyennes in 1876 - 77, Chief Joseph's Nez Perces in 1877 and the Bannocks in 1878. Arriving at Fort Bowie in April, Miles prepared for an energetic campaign.

Spearhead of the campaign was a detachment of cavalry, infantry and Indian scouts commanded by Capt. Henry W. Lawton of the Fourth cavalry—the same Lawton who became a general and lost his life during the Philippine insurrection, 13 years later.

Lawton's pursuit of the Apaches was one of the most brilliant feats in the history of the American army. He and his men stuck to the trail with the persistence of bloodhounds.

Their dogged pursuit, plus the Indians' knowledge that they were in constant danger of attack by other troops operating against them, gradually wore down even the tireless Apaches. Among these troops were detachments of the Sixth cavalry, one of whose officers was Lieut. Charles B. Gatewood, a West Point graduate in 1877, who had distinguished himself during the Apache campaign of 1883-84 and had won the friendship and respect of Geronimo's warriors while they were on the San Carlos reservation during the next two years.

In July, 1886, Miles believing that Geronimo and Naiche were about ready to give up the struggle, decided to send a message to them demanding their surrender and stipulating certain terms under which it would be accepted. The task of getting this message to the Apache leaders was entrusted to Gatewood. With two friendly Chiricahuas, Martine and Ka-teah (or Kayitah), to act as scouts, George Wratton as interpreter and several other civilians as packers and couriers, Gatewood started on his mission. For a military escort he was to call upon some of the commanders then in the field and Miles instructed him not to go near the hostiles with fewer than 25 soldiers as his escort. However, none of the detachments Gatewood encountered could spare 25 men so he pushed on without this military backing.

Eventually Gatewood established contact with Lawton's column and late in August he learned that Geronimo was near Fronteras. Leaving Lawton's command Gatewood pushed on rapidly and reached Fronteras where he found a detachment of cavalrymen under the command of Lieutenant Wilder. Taking ten men from this detachment as an escort, Gatewood followed the fresh Apache trail. Near the big bend of the Bivaspe river in Sonora, Martine and Kateah located Geronimo's camp, which they entered and delivered Miles' ultimatum.

A Daring Venture

Geronimo sent back word that he wanted to talk with Gatewood and Naiche added his assurance that their friend, the lieutenant, would be safe in coming to a conference. Even so, it was a risky business.

But unmindful of this danger Gatewood proceeded with the negotiations. His understanding of the Apache character and his diplomatic handling of the situation resulted finally in Geronimo's agreeing to meet Miles in Skeleton canyon in Arizona and surrender, on condition that the Indians should be allowed to retain their arms while marching to the meeting with Miles and and that Gatewood should accompany. Gatewood agreed to this, subject to Lawton's approval.

The next day the march for the border started. Several times during that march the Indians became suspicious of the good faith of the Americans and had it not been for the presence of Gatewood there is a strong possibility that Geronimo and Naiche would have slipped away with their warriors once more.

LIEUT. C. B. GATEWOOD

But after 11 days the whole party arrived in Skeleton canyon where Miles met them. He confirmed the terms of the surrender just as they had been delivered to Geronimo by Gatewood, whom the Indian leader complimented highly for having told him the exact truth. There on September 6, 1886 Geronimo surrendered for the last time.

The captive Apaches were sent to Florida and, characteristic of the stupid blundering of officialdom in handling the Indian problem, the two faithful Indian scouts, Martine and Kateah, who had helped Gatewood bring about the surrender of the hostiles, were sent along with them as prisoners of war! After a few years in Florida, the Apaches were removed to Alabama and finally settled on a reservation near Fort Sill, Oklahoma where Geronimo, after many vain attempts to have his people returned to Arizona, died on February 17, 1909.

Find Ivory Apollo in 300 Fragments Down Athens Well

Statue Believed Work of Great Praxiteles

PRINCETON, N. J.—An ivory statuette of Apollo by a very great Athenian sculptor, possibly Praxiteles himself, is an outstanding discovery of this year's archeological digging by Americans at Athens, just announced.

The statuette, which was found in 300 pieces in the depths of a well in Athens, has been successfully put together again, says Dr. T. Leslie Shear, field director of the American School of Classical Studies at Athens, who has just returned to the United States.

When several experts failed at the delicate task of restoring the jig-saw problem piece, Mrs. Shear, wife of the director, tried, and with help from the school staff she completed it in two weeks. The ivory was fitted over a mass of beeswax for foundation.

The statuette was found during excavation of 27 wells located when the expedition scraped the rocky hill on which the famous Theseum, or Temple of Hephaestus, stood. This most perfectly preserved of all Greek temples is near the Agora, or market place, where the expedition has been making important discoveries since 1931.

On the side of this Theseum hill looking toward the Agora, the digging revealed ancient landscape gardening plans. Two rows of holes were found paralleling the temple's columns. The holes once contained flower pots, judging by their shape, and the pots were quite modern in style.

Dr. Shear plans to beautify the ancient Athenian market place when the long task of exploring its buried contents is nearer completion. It will be, he says, made into "a real garden spot."

Giant Star Camera Will Photograph Entire Milky Way

WYNNEWOOD, PA.—A two and one-half ton battery of three-star cameras, the largest using plates two feet wide, has just been placed in operation at the private observatory of Dr. Gustavus Wynne Cook, located here.

Largest camera battery of its kind in the world, Dr. Cook will use it to make a series of photographs of the entire Milky Way. After photographing all the Milky Way area that is within reach from here, he expects to move the equipment to South America or South Africa, so that regions of the sky which never rise in the Philadelphia area can be recorded.

Takes Huge Pictures.

The three cameras take pictures on plates 20 by 24 inches, 14 by 17 inches and 8 by 10 inches. They are equipped with lenses, 6½, 5 and 4 inches in diameter, of a type invented by Dr. Frank E. Ross, of the University of Chicago's Yerkes observatory.

There is a guiding telescope with four-inch lens by means of which the photographer can keep the cameras accurately pointed at a selected part of the sky. He can also correct any errors in the running of the electric motor which turns it once daily from east to west to compensate for the earth's rotation.

Chronic Hoarseness May Be Early Sign of Cancer

NEW YORK.—Persistent hoarseness calls for careful examination by a trained throat specialist, warns Dr. Leo Schwartz in the current issue of Preventive Medicine. He calls hoarseness the "herald symptom" of cancer of the larynx and points out that it is also the symptom of 49 other conditions, none of them trivial.

Cancer of the larynx gives its warning sign earlier and remains localized longer than cancer anywhere else in the body, and early diagnosis and treatment offer a better chance for recovery than in other cancers. In the early stage this condition can be relieved by an operation which does not deprive the patient of his voice or necessitate the use of an artificial voice box.

PHEASANT AND QUAIL SEASONS ARE STUDIED

The Division of Fish and Game of the Conservation Commission is now considering plans for the formulation of regulations for the open season on pheasant and quail

It is hoped to have the tentative regulations prepared for the next meeting of the Commission which will be held October 6th, after which public hearings will be held in the pheasant and quail territories. The final regulations will then be put into force.

Game authorities now studying the game population of the state report the number of pheasants and quail as sufficient for open seasons in most counties in the two territories.

Authorities explain that the normal spring and dry weather after the young were hatched caused an unusual increase in the game bird population.

ARRANGE NOW FOR HUNTING

With the squirrel and rabbit seasons opening on September 15, will you be one of the thousands of hunters who failed to make arrangements with the farmer for a place to hunt? The farmer does not want to meet you at the gate on the opening day in order to protect his property. He would like to know beforehand who is going to hunt on his land. He wants to know that whoever hunts on his farm will be careful about shooting his livestock, that gates will be closed to prevent cattle from getting out and, in general, his property will be protected. He wants to know that all the game will not be killed off, that a sufficient seed stock will remain for next year. He wants to explain all this to the hunter before the season opens and have the assurance that the hunter is sincere and honest and is concerned about the perpetuation of all game.

Go now and talk to those farmers where you would like to hunt. Make your arrangements with him now. Perhaps there are somethings you can help the farmer with. How about your assistance in controlling trespass on his farm during the hunting season? How about helping the farmer post certain parts of his farm to preserve the seed stock? There are many things you can help the farmer with and which he would appreciate in exchange for the hunting privileges.

The farmer is the custodian of all game. He protects it and brings it through for an open season. The least any hunter can do is to make arrangements in advance for the privilege to hunt on his land. Let us make the 1936 hunting season the most orderly and most enjoyable for everyone.

New Deal Foreclosed on 11,438 Farms in '35

Washington, D. C.—Mortgages on 11,438 farms were foreclosed during 1935 under the New Deal, records of the Farm Credit administration here show. This is more than two and one-half times the number of such foreclosures in 1934, and 1,399 more than in 1932. One farm in every ten is now under mortgage to the United States.

The federal government, according to the records, owned 27,516 farms at the end of 1935, roughly 5,000 more than it owned at the same time the year before All had been seized through foreclosures.

Despite the large increase in foreclosures, 128,457 or approximately one-fifth of the loans of the FCA on Dec 31, 1935 were delinquent. By ruling of the FCA on February 1, 1935, this did not include loans upon which an extension had been granted.

Critics of the New Deal policies pointed out that the government was paying bounties to farmers, presumably to keep them solvent, at the same time that it was foreclosing on thousands more farm mortgages than it had the year before.

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted
by William Bruckart

National Press Building Washington, D. C.

Washington. — The Associated Press carried a dispatch from Moscow a few days ago that had more in it than just the announcement that certain oppositionists among the Soviet leaders were to be executed. The dispatch reported that 16 confessed conspirators against the Soviet state were sentenced to death by the firing squad as the "highest measure of social defense" of a government.

'Social Defense' in Russia

It reported a new stage in the so-called progress of Communism in the Russian state. For the first time since the Bolsheviks came into power they ordered the death penalty for some of the leaders who marched in the Revolution of October, 1917.

So we have a clean sweep now of the men who sat next to the dictator, Lenin; the men who were his closest advisors in council are out of the way, and in their place remains the extensively practical and strong-willed executive, Stalin, who has in this instance declined to allow theory to interfere with a condition.

Here is the picture. Leon Trotsky in exile and under sentence of death if he returns into Russia. Zinoviev shot to death. Kamenev also executed by a firing squad (he will be remembered as an outstanding pillar of Bolshevism). Tomsky, a suicide. Rykov, Bukahrin and Rodek under investigation by the dreadful Ogpu. A hated secret service is looking into the records of Sokolnikov and Pyotakov. The latter two have been important advisors to Stalin. But what is all of this about? The answer is simple. While these men were charged with plotting the murder of Stalin, with conspiracy, beneath it all lies the thirst of men for power. Through all of this since the fall of the Russian empire and the execution of Czar Nicholas, the Communists have pushed forward. The strongest of them have traveled. That is the why of Stalin. Yet as most always happens under any circumstance where the will of a few men runs free, they have inflicted to the last degree the power that they have gathered unto themselves. In so doing they have not failed to reserve unto themselves such considerations as they thought necessary—a perfectly human trait of character answerable only where a whim becomes a will and there is power to carry it out.

Between Stalin, who was able to enforce his will, and Trotsky, who dwelt in the starry heavens of theories and dreams, there is only a theoretical difference. Each wanted Communism. Trotsky considered the problem in the terms of world revolution; Stalin thought of it as the Russian state and recognized his capacity to carry his plans through in that jurisdiction. So the Stalin-Trotsky feud, as it has turned out to be, has become ferocious and any one who has gone contrary—even entertained thoughts contrary to the will of the mighty Stalin—committed a sin against the state. And a sin against the Russian state under Stalin means to disappear.

It seems to me there is an important lesson for the American people in that situation. Stalin, along with Hitler and Mussolini, is always right. It matters not what the people may desire, what their philosophy of life and living may be, how they propose to encourage or accept responsibility for self-government, the dictatorship continues.

Lesson for Americans

Many times in these columns I have criticized bureaucracy in the federal government. There are so many bureaucrats in Washington now that some one has bitterly described them as locusts. It may seem quite a jump from bureaucracy to dictatorship but the difference actually is very small. When the people of the United States concede to the federal government such rights as the federal government attempted to exercise in NRA and even to a greater extent in the AAA, they are taking the first step to grant to a centralized government the authority that leads to absolute control of the person and everything that person does.

There are conditions undoubtedly that need to be remedied before our form of government is anything like perfect. There is always to be considered changing conditions and the changing whims of people themselves. But I entertain the conviction that so long as the American people are unwilling to accord increasing powers to the federal government, the nation as a whole will go forward, civilization will progress and we will enjoy having a government.

The transfer of William C. Bullitt from his recent post as ambassador to Russia to a similar assignment in France upon the resignation of Ambassador Straus has occasioned but very little comment, but it seems to me in view of all conditions and circumstances that it should attract attention. He will take up the job as the chief American diplomat at Paris in most troublesome times, the most difficult, perhaps, that have confronted an American diplomat anywhere since the days of 191- to 1916. Appointment of Mr. Bullitt then, it would appear, is a move that calls into consideration not only the conditions which he will meet as our ambassador but also his qualifications for the job.

Bullitt's Big Job

It is to be remembered, first, that the post of ambassador to Paris is the second highest in rank among our foreign diplomats. It is a post that always has called for about the best that our nation can turn out in the way of tactful representation even though we always count the assignment to London as the No. 1 ranking post. The reason is that we seldom, if ever, have had the problems to deal with in the case of the London government that continuously arise between the United States and France. We always have been friendly with France in modern times, but it can not be denied that there has been constant friction between the two peoples. The same has not been true concerning Anglo-American relations. Hence, the job at Paris has always been regarded as more difficult than that at London.

As for Mr. Bullitt's capacity, there is a general feeling that he is not an outstanding diplomat. He has achieved success in some lines, yet I believe the consensus is that in so far as his recent service at Moscow is concerned, the Russians can claim much greater success in dealing with the United States than we can in dealing with the Soviet.

Those of us who were present as observers in Washington during the days when Foreign Commissar Litvinov met with President Roosevelt in the series of conferences that resulted in recognition of the Union of Soviet Socialistic Republics can not fail to recall how Mr. Bullitt labored to accomplish that recognition. It will be recalled as well that Mr. Bullitt insisted throughout these negotiations how trade would follow recognition. He urged that the 13-year old policy of non-recognition, held by Wilson, Harding, Coolidge and Hoover, should be cast aside in the interest of trade, predicting a great flow of commerce between the nations. President Roosevelt eventually made that the real basis for granting recognition.

None of the predicted trade has come about. None will be possible until the Soviet finds means of paying for American goods. American business men are a bit old fashioned. They want to be paid for what they sell.

After what some critics have called Mr. Bullitt's "dismal failure" at Moscow, he is promoted to the French post. The selection comes at a time when French internal politics are boiling. It comes likewise at a time when the Washington government is striving to expand American exports and when it is hoped that there will not be a further decline in outbound shipments such as official figures of the Department of Commerce show has taken place in trade with Russia.

Senator James Couzens of Michigan who is up for re-election this fall has sort of upset the apple cart for the Republicans, although they profess not to be particularly worried. The senior senator from Michigan has always served in the senate as a Republican but now he makes the announcement that he is going to support President Roosevelt for re-election and that brings the senator's regularity as a Republican into question.

Upsets Apple Cart

Senator Couzens has been a powerful man politically in Michigan in years past. He has served his city, Detroit, and his state and the nation in a distinguished way. Obviously, such service builds up an important political following but, according to superficial indication, no one knows exactly how much remains of that following. This statement assumes that the senator's strength is not as great as it used to be and all current information supports that view. Yet, in politics, nothing is certain and that is the reason why Senator Couzens's action has proved disturbing.

Former Gov. Wilbur M. Brucker is seeking the Republican nomination for the senate in Michigan and thus the incumbent has his difficulties in getting the nomination because the Democrats will have a candidate of their own. Be it said in favor of Senator Couzens, however, he was fair with the voters of his party by announcing before the primaries what his attitude would be respecting the presidential candidates and his sincerity in this regard may have some effect. On the other hand, it is difficult to say how dyed-in-the-wool Republicans can remain with Senator Couzens after an announcement by which he virtually has read himself out of the party.

Stars Are Factories Producing Energy From Simple Element

Stellar Bodies Have Life of Several Billion Years

SEATTLE.—The inside of a star is a factory which makes complex elements out of the simplest element of all, namely hydrogen. This is the point of view presented to the American Physical society here by Dr. R. M. Langer of the California Institute of Technology.

The output of the factory is not complex elements but energy which is radiated away as the star shines a few billion years. The complex atoms are left behind mostly in the form of iron.

Only a minute fraction of the energy of a single star, the sun, is caught by our earth and this energy is what makes our factories work to make complex things out of simple ones.

Hydrogen is Stabilizer.

The stellar factory would blow up in its enthusiasm for energy production were it not for the stabilizing effect of the complex atoms. Of these the most important stabilizer is heavy hydrogen. When things get too hot heavy hydrogen breaks up into a neutron and an ordinary hydrogen atom and things are back where they started.

It is this accident of the balance between neutrons and deutons which determines how hot the star becomes and how long it lives. The internal temperatures are about half a billion degrees and the life is several billion years.

According to Sir James Jeans the stars shine much longer than that but few agree with him. No process known to happen is competent to keep a star going over ten billion years. No process known is able to heat a star over a billion degrees, Dr. Langer pointed out, because the radiation at that temperature would exhaust any process ever suggested before that temperature would be reached.

Photons Rage.

At these high temperatures matter is quite different from the matter we know. No compounds exist. No solids or liquids are possible. Neutrons, positive electrons, and deutons, all newly discovered and rare on the earth, abound. Above all and predominating everything, photons of light fierce as X-rays rage to and fro.

Things are so lively that we can never hope to make any direct experiments under these conditions. Yet the basis for Dr. Langer's calculations are the experiments which are being made in many laboratories with comparative ease shooting atoms at one another at high speed and scoring the hits.

Bears Follow "Handout" 50 Miles Over Mountain

YELLOWSTONE PARK.—Bears, like hoboes, seem to have an uncanny knack of finding out where the handouts grow.

A little less than two months ago, when Yellowstone National park opened up for the annual tourist season, the bear "cafeteria" at Old Faithful, where the Bruins have for years been regaling themselves nightly on hotel and camp table scraps, was shut down in accordance with the park service policy of making the bears rustle for their own grub.

Many Old Customers.

Only the "cafeteria" at the Grand canyon of the Yellowstone, about fifty miles away, was kept open for business this season.

Now, Ranger Wayne Replogle, who got to know a lot of the bears at sight during several seasons on "bear ground" duty at Old Faithful, has recognized quite a number of his old friends in the new locality.

Hugest Extinct Animal Restored in New York

NEW YORK.—The biggest beast that ever trod on dry land, Central Asia's giant Baluchitherium, is now shown as he was in life, at the American Museum of Natural History, in a restoration sculpture which will be placed on display in the near future. Museum artists are now putting the finishing touches on the enormous image, which mounts a body as big as two elephants on top of massive six-foot-high legs.

Towering higher than any living giraffe, the Baluchitherium was a primitive representative of the rhinoceros family. It lived some 25,000,000 years ago.

Instinct Is Faulty Guide to Choice of Diet, Doctors Say

Selection of Best Foods Is Matter of Experience

MANY a person, resentful of modern dietary directions, of being told to eat foods he does not like or to forego favorite items of diet because of their effect on his health, has revived the old idea that instinct or appetite is a good dietary guide.

The reason why one cannot rely on instinct in choosing foods is told by Dr. Leslie J. Harris, of the Nutritional laboratory, University of Cambridge, and the Medical Research council, in his book, "Vitamins in Theory and Practice." As Dr. Harris explains it, the reason chiefly is a matter of time.

"You demand a hot drink when you are cold because of a subconscious recollection of having felt warmer after you had had one last time," he points out.

Pains After Dumplings.

"Similarly with the elementary feelings of hunger itself. The sensation of well-being following a hearty dinner will encourage you to repeat the treatment another time. And again, if you have pains after eating dumplings, you will soon learn to forego them (granted ordinary intelligence).

"But now compare this with the effects of foods which are less immediate and dramatic in action. If you are getting rickety from insufficient vitamin D, or, shall we say, anemic from insufficient iron, it is hard to see that instinct will teach you which foods would cure you—for the simple reason that they do not produce their good effect quickly enough for you to notice it. But you would none the less suffer permanent damage from their lack, and many thousands do."

How Animals Choose.

Dr. Harris and associates actually tested the theory that animals can instinctively pick the correct foods. After several years of research, they found that animals were able to choose the right food if it made them feel better immediately after eating it. If it had a particular taste or smell or color by which they could recognize it, they learned to take such foods quite easily.

Thus the matter of choosing foods that are good for you, whether you are a human animal or a dog, "is a matter of experience."

Old Incan Empire Called Lesson for Economists

CHICAGO. — Modern economists can take a lesson in planned economy from the old Incan empire. It ruled millions of South American Indians until Spanish conquest made it collapse like a house of cards.

Lives were strictly regulated in this empire. No one of humble birth could rise to an important office. Each clan owned its land, and the community cultivated it, working the private sections, sections devoted to religious contribution, and those devoted to government revenues.

Birth and death records were kept. Roads were built by quota labor. The notables or Incas ruled, considering themselves the brains of the Communistic state.

Prof. J. Eric Thompson of the Field Museum of Natural History recommends study of this ancient regime, in his new "Archeology of South America."

"It gives us an insight," he says, "into the function of an autocracy grafted on Communism, and an opportunity of studying the successes and failures of that novel system."

Loudspeakers for Cars Quiet "Drive-In" Shows

WASHINGTON. — Neighbors of "drive-in" motion picture theaters, the kind where patrons drive in and sit in their autos while seeing and listening to the show, would not be annoyed by the loud blasts of the screen's loudspeakers, if a new way of quieting the "talkies" should go into widespread use.

Individual loudspeakers for each car is the feature of the invention for which a patent has just been granted to G. Douthwaite of Los Angeles, Calif. Each parking space in the open air theater would be provided with a loudspeaker. A car would pull into the parking space and drive up a ramp until the radiator of the auto would almost contact with the cone of the loudspeaker.

In this way sound would travel from the loudspeaker, through the radiator of the car, through the dashboard into the auto proper. Each car would thus be literally coupled to a loudspeaker through its radiator. In this way, it is claimed that sound is confined to the car, and little escapes to the open air and the surrounding neighborhood.

SERIOUS FEEDING TIME FOR TURKEYS

Growers Should Be Putting Pounds on Birds.

By L. E. CLINE, University of Nevada Agricultural Extension Division.—WNU Service.

Turkey growers who want to make profits at the business are putting the pounds on their birds as fast as possible these days. The four or five months of the summer feeding period are the most vital to making profits. The first six weeks of the turkey's life is a very critical period, but little weight is put on. The finishing period just before marketing the birds is also important, but in it likewise little weight is added in proportion to the large expense for feed.

But during the in-between period, according to Cline, the rapidly growing turkey adds pounds economically because it converts, at a rapid rate, large amounts of a relatively low priced feed into a high-priced commodity to grace the table during the fall and winter. During this fast growing period a relatively small proportion of the feed given is needed for maintenance while a large proportion is available for growth and profits.

When the average turkey is two months old, it will weigh about 2.5 pounds. This weight is put on at an average rate of 2.15 pounds of feed per pound gain in weight. A month later the turkey will weigh 5 pounds, and will be gaining one pound for approximately each three pounds of feed eaten.

At the end of the fourth month, the turkey should weigh at least 8.25 pounds and is turning feed into turkey meat at the rate of 3.5 pounds of feed to one pound of turkey.

Good gains may be made also during the fifth month, but thereafter the ratio of pounds gained to feed consumed declines very rapidly, until it takes 5.6 pounds of feed to produce one pound of turkey in the sixth month and approximately 10.7 pounds of feed for one pound of meat in the seventh month.

After that the feed often costs more than the net price which will be received for the additional pounds of turkey.

While feeding in adequate quantity is very important, the composition of the feed is equally important. The two must go together if the most pounds of turkey are to be put on.

Turn on Electric Lights to Increase Egg Supply

The normal decline in egg production which follows as summer's advance can be checked somewhat by the use of artificial light, reports C. S. Platt, associate professor of poultry husbandry at the New Jersey College of Agriculture, Rutgers University.

During the last two years, he says, artificial light has been used at the New Jersey egg laying contests. The result in both years has been a slight increase in production over a period of two or three weeks following the introduction of the light.

Lights are turned on at 4 a. m. daylight saving time and turned off at sunrise. Don't continue artificial lights on old hens after late October.

Weak-Legged Chicks

Leg weakness in chickens may be caused from a number of things. One common cause is lack of cod liver oil or sunlight, something which will provide the necessary vitamins to offset this form of weakness. There should be no difficulty with this ailment, states an authority in the Montreal Herald, as letting the chickens out into the sunshine should correct the affliction. Feeding cod liver oil at the rate of about 1½ to 2 per cent in the mash should correct it even if the chickens are kept indoors. Internal parasites might also cause leg weakness. In this case it would be advisable to have a post mortem made of some of the ailing specimens by a pathologist to find out if internal parasites are present.

Chickens Must Have Water

Hot weather sends the poultryman to the well many times during each day for a refreshing drink of cold water. He must remember that his layers get just as thirsty as does he, and they need water just as much as he does, or even more, because of the body functioning which he expects of them. The water supply in the summer henhouse should be extra clean—for it is hot weather—always abundant, cool, and fresh. Never let the supply run dry.—

Preserving Infertile Eggs

Infertile eggs preserve better and longer. If fertile eggs are to be used they should be candled. Water glass solution is prepared by mixing one quart water glass to nine quarts boiled water which has been cooled. A one-gallon container will hold 40 eggs and 3 pints, 10 ounces of the mixture. A five-gallon container has a capacity of 200 eggs using 18 pints of the water glass mixture. Best results are obtained when fresh, clean, infertile eggs are used.

Cattle Slaughter Angers Farmers

Protest New Deal Cure-All; Seek to Save Remnants of Herds.

By FRANK RIDGWAY

More than 800,000 cattle have been killed and added to the New Dealers' animal "death list," along with little pigs and expectant mother-sows slaughtered near the beginning of the Roosevelt administration's "three long years." These cattle killing activities have been carried on in connection with the administration's Bang's disease campaign conducted in 48 states during the last two years.

Meat and milk production has been reduced and more and more imports of cattle, beef, and dairy products are coming in from foreign countries as a result. In the meantime Bang's disease runs rampant in the farmers' dairy and beef herds.

Disgruntled farmers favor calling a halt on the test. They have become dissatisfied with the program. But their cattle still are being "mowed down" as fast as federal government men can make their tests to sort out the diseased cattle and send them to slaughter.

Bothered by Dreams.

Apparently men who are trying to run the farms of America by jerking puppet strings radiating out from Washington, still are working on the idea that there are too many cattle in the United States.

Farmers and ranchmen are anxious to get rid of cattle infected with Bang's disease, which causes the loss of calves in both dairy and beef herds and undulant fever in human beings. But after having 10,000,000 tests made on their animals, they have become skeptical. They doubt the accuracy and value of the test.

Farmers and New Deal planners alike apparently thought the program had merit when it was started. The idea of government aid in getting rid of infected animals seemed sound. Experience soon proved that the planners had entirely overlooked the fact that the test for Bang's disease had not been standardized and perfected to the point where it could be depended upon to give satisfactory results when applied under various conditions on a national scale.

Some farmers had taken both the test and the sound judgment of the Washington officials pretty much for granted. They have now found to their sorrow that neither of their assumptions were justified.

Farmers Now Dissatisfied.

For many months dissatisfaction has spread among farmers throughout the country. Through their breeders' organizations dairy and beef cattle owners decided to make an investigation and go to the bottom of the Bang's campaign fostered by politicians at Washington. About 200 of the cattlemen's representatives recently met in Springfield, Illinois, where they aired the whole cattle killing program.

They found out that from the beginning the New Dealers apparently had used the Bang's disease test as an excuse to slaughter more of their cattle. Farmers now realize that they have been paying a high price to aid political theorists in planning their revolutionary agricultural reduction scheme.

Nearly 700,000 herds of beef and dairy animals have been submitted for test since July 1, 1934. Some of the farmers have lost many of their most valuable animals. In one southern Wisconsin dairy herd of 859 cattle all of them were found to be diseased excepting 130.

New Deal Pacts Nullify Dairy Sanitation Code

Chicago.—The "mad internationalists" of the New Deal party, in flooding the country with foreign dairy products, are throwing America's program of sanitation to the winds, according to Congressman F. D. Culkin of Oswego, New York, assistant director of the farm division of the Republican National committee.

"In the past 20 years, the government and the farmers of America have spent more than $500,000,000 to protect the public health and obtain dairy products free from dirt and disease," said Congressman Culkin.

"Under the present reciprocal trade agreements made by Secretary Hull and President Roosevelt, all this disbursement is thrown to the winds because the Hull treaties make no provisions as to quarantine and sanitary regulations and the protection of milk products at their source, in foreign countries. Furthermore, the present treaties bind the United States not to make any further changes in the quarantine provisions of our own country during the life of the treaties."

62,894 Out of Jobs.

Chicago.—Economists here estimated that 62,894 rural persons were denied the opportunity for self-support by imports of cattle, beef and veal under the New Deal during 1935.

From the World Power Conference

At the Third World Power Conference held in Washington, D C., last week a paper was presented setting out the following facts:

"The privately owner utilities do 94 percent of the electric business of the nation.'

"The kilowatt hour sales per customer in the United States exceed those in any other country except Norway and Switzerland, where abundant and continuous hydroelectric power sources are found."

"Municipal operation in this country is more expensive than private operation when taxes are deducted from private rates. Los Angeles, the largest city having municipal operation, has higher rates than those in Washington, Cincinnati, Buffalo and St. Louis and the average use in Los Angeles is below the national average."

The ordinary man and woman pays the expense of this administration as far as it is being paid, and you are not escaping in contributing your share toward sustaining this wasteful and profligate New Deal. If you want four more years of it, vote for Roosevelt and you will get it; he cannot escape and apparently does not desire to escape from the course he has laid

REBUILD WEST WALL OF KLEMME CREAMERY PLANT

Repairing Of Storm Damage Adds To Beauty Of Local Plant

The hard wind storm of a weeks ago destroyed the greater part of the west wall of the Klemme Creamery building, which made it necessary to rebuild that part of the building.

The bricks used in rebuilding the wall are the same kind as were used in the new addition and new front. With the wall rebuilt on the west side the plant now has the appearance of a new building.

The Klemme Creamery will have a nice looking building when the repairs have all been completed.

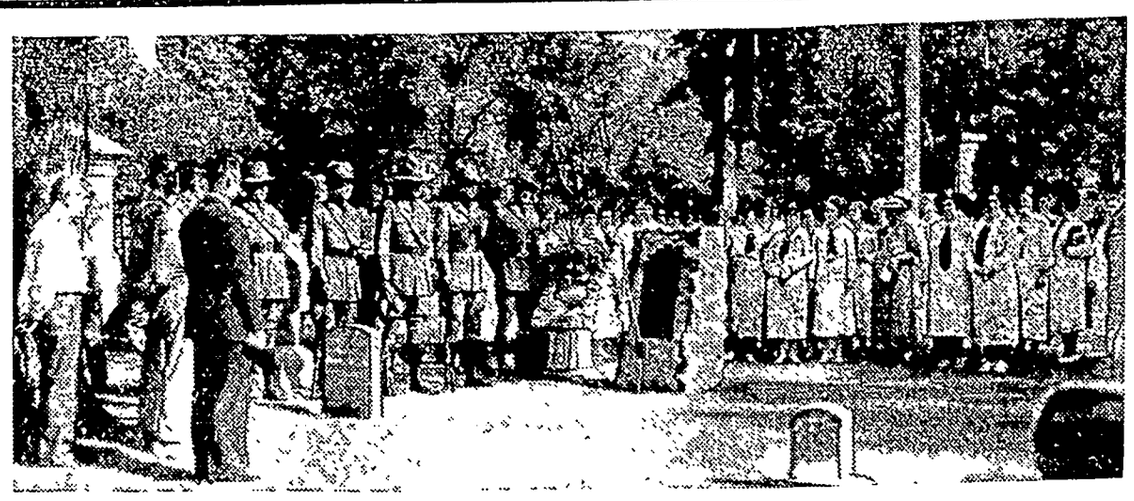
SALUTE TO SAMUEL WILSON, THE ORIGINAL "UNCLE SAM"

By LOUISE M. COMSTOCK

MEN variously serve their country. Some live, others die for it. Samuel Wilson rendered the United States of America a service no other individual has yet been able to duplicate. He gave his country that symbolic personality which embodies all the traits popularly attributed to its people; the name by which it has been praised and reviled, revered and ridiculed the world over. He did it uniquely, simply by being himself. Samuel Wilson was Uncle Sam.

For this service Samuel Wilson recently received his nation's thanks. At the impressive upright oblong of granite which marks his grave in Oakwood cemetery, in Troy, N. Y., a new flag climbed its pole, a stiff, fresh wreath tipped against the stone, a band played and state troopers fired a military salute. The New York department of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, convening at Troy, thus paid homage to an early Trojan. But, "We are not in the final analysis honoring a single individual," said National Commander-in-Chief James E. Van Zandt. "Rather we are dedicating this program to our country itself, to the spirit of Americanism which prevails in our relations with one another and with the world."



Veterans of Foreign Wars, Members of the Ladies Auxiliary, V. F. W., and a Firing Squad of State Police Stand at the Grave of "Uncle Sam" Wilson in Oakwood Cemetery in Troy, N. Y., as Tribute Is Paid to His Memory.

Memorial Over the Grave of "Uncle Sam" Wilson, Erected by His Daughter, Mrs. Marion Wilson Sheldon.

Had Samuel Wilson been aware during his lifetime that he was to become all that, it is probable he would have thought his metamorphosis a huge joke. That, we gather, is the sort of person he was. Kindly, shrewd, humorous, scrupulously honest: the best of New England broadened a bit by its first adventurous step westward.

A Bay State Scot

He was born in 1766 at Menotomy, now Arlington, Mass., eighth of thirteen children in a Scotch family which could claim early and influential connections in Boston but never rose to the dignity of a coat of paint on its own shack! In 1780 the family moved to Mason, N. H And in 1781 the youthful Samuel, having attained the advanced age of fifteen years, did his duty as he saw it by enlisting as service boy in the American Army of the Revolution. Had he been even a drummer boy, history might have caught him early. But he was merely a service boy.

In 1789, at the comparatively mature age of twenty-three, Sam left Mason with his brother, Ebenezer, and followed the trend of the times westward Not very far west, except as measured by the near-sighted eyes of 1789. What is today the city of Troy was then but a raw settlement on the banks of the Hudson river.

Early Trojans

Sam and Ed Wilson were among the first to settle there. They chose well. Behind the settlement rose two small hills, named in accordance with that region's taste in classical nomenclature, Mounts Ida and Olympus. Their western slopes, where is today Troy's pleasant Prospect park, contained clay suitable for making bricks. Sam and Eb had learned about bricks back in New Hampshire. They had also sized up shrewdly the local situation Already the more substantial citizenry of Albany was advertising its substance by living in brick houses, their materials imported, like the urge to own them, from its native Holland. The Wilsons bought a farm on Mount Ida and went into the brick business.

There are buildings standing in Troy today constructed of Wilson bricks. For that matter the whole country is rich with evidence of their lives there.

At one time Sam ran two farms, one of which he used for a summer and one a winter home. He and his brother left their mark on their holdings in such local terms as "Wilson's Bowl" and "Wilson's Hollow."

Betsy Wilson was a New Hampshire girl, daughter of a veteran of the Battle of Bunker Hill. In 1797, the brick business well under way, Sam returned to Mason to marry her and bring her back to Troy. She bore him four children, two of whom reached maturity. Benjamin became a lawyer. It was his daughter, the late Mrs. Marion Wilson Sheldon, who erected to her grandfather's memory the monument which marks his grave today. Her son, Carlton Wood Sheldon of Kansas City, his daughter, Mrs. Helen Marion Brockett, and her daughter, Betty Sheldon Brockett, are Uncle Sam's and Aunt Betsy's only living descendants today.

Early Packers

The brick business well in hand, the Wilson brothers extended their efforts Adjoining one of Sam's farm houses was a large field suitable for grazing, watered by two ponds. Here the Wilsons undertook to raise stock. Their cattle flourished The Wilsons erected a slaughter house, and entered the meat business. As early as 1805 they could advertise in the local papers: "Two large and convenient slaughter houses," where could be "killed, cut and packed 150 head of cattle per day." When times were at their best, the slaughter houses required employment of 200 men. Still the Wilsons expanded. At the foot of what is now Ferry street they built a dock. They purchased their own sloops. Out from the firm of S. and E. Wilson at Troy and down the Hudson to Albany and points east came Wilson meats and Wilson bricks by the shipload.

And what is so noble in that? What to warrant flags and wreaths and military salutes? Nothing at all. Uncle Sam was simply being himself, working shrewdly but with honor for his own interests.

The War of 1812 created urgent demand for provisions for the troops saving the United States from the British. One Elbert Anderson Jr. of New Jersey obtained a government contract for rationing the New York and New Jersey troops stationed near Albany. The contract, still to be examined in the War Department records at Washington, specifies "2,000 barrels of prime pork and 300 barrels of prime beef in full bound barrels of white oak." In those days there were no refrigerated freight cars. Elbert Anderson took stock of the local sources of supply. He advertised in the Troy papers. As a result the slaughter houses of S. and E. Wilson were commissioned to furnish a goodly portion of the meat required, and Sam Wilson was additionally appointed United States inspector to pass upon its "prime" condition. On every barrel thus approved he stamped the letters U. S. for United States and E. A. for Elbert Anderson.

And now comes the crux of the story, muffled as such crisis usually are by legend, by hearsay and by local imaginings. What actually took place may be as clearly deduced from its most dramatic version as from any other. It begins like an old familiar, with an encounter between an Irishman and an innocent bystander. Asked the bystander, nodding his head toward one of the certified barrels, "And what does the U. S. stand for?" "Uncle Sam," said the Irishman. (You can supply your own brogue.) "Oh, come now, Uncle Sam who?" "Why, don't you know? Uncle Sam Wilson. He owns nearly all about here and he's feedin the army!"

So much for the acorn from which grew the mighty oak. For the nourishment which sped that growth to colossal proportions, one must examine the temper and morale of the troops which fought the War of 1812. It was probably not much different from that of any troops in any war. For physical and mental torture so long continued that they have themselves become monotony, laughter is a wonderful though perverse panacea. Perhaps you think the Irishman's retort in this case not particularly funny. Maybe so. But the troops to which the story wended its way were composed of boys from in and about Troy. They had known Samuel Wilson all their lives, they knew him as Uncle Sam, and they found it funny. That was enough.

Began as a Joke

Whatever the psychology involved, the joke stuck. So Uncle Sam Wilson was feeding the army, was he? Well, if it was Uncle Sam's meat they were eating, why not Uncle Sam's so-and-so uniforms they were wearing, Uncle Sam's lousy blankets they slept under, Uncle Sam's this-and-that hospitals to which they carried their wounds, and Uncle Sam's these-them-and-those war they were fighting? It is a fact that by 1813 the term was in common use among the troops stationed near Albany to designate the United States of America.

It was first printed in this connotation in the papers of that region. The Troy Post in an editorial of September 7, 1813, referred to the hard luck which had lighted "on Uncle Sam's shoulders", and added in a footnote "this cant term for our government has got almost as current as John Bull." Shortly thereafter Uncle Sam's teams, his troops and payroll were mentioned in several northern New York and western Vermont papers. The Columbia Sentinel in December, 1814, printed an editorial entitled "Uncle Sam and John Bull," contrasting the niggardly pay in the American Army with that in the British. Finally, in Nile's Register for 1815, we find a definition: "U. S. or Uncle Sam—a cant term in the army for the United States."

It was time and the cartoonist, of course, who promoted Uncle Sam from a "cant term" to a definite personality. It was done by the conventional methods of caricature.

The first known picturization of the new synonym for the United States appeared in Punch, London, in 1844. It showed a long, lean Uncle Sam in long coat tails and stove pipe hat. According to those who should know, Samuel Wilson was long and lean and wore a high beaver hat, though how the news reached London is beyond conjecture. First American cartoon was drawn in 1852 by F. Bellow for the New York Lantern, a comic weekly of the period. It added, whether to the London version or to the original we shall never know, the familiar tight trousers; low-cut waistcoat, high collar and bow tie. It was Thomas Nast, famous American cartoonist, who embellished the figure further with chin whiskers, striped his trousers, starred his waistcoat, and otherwise brought it up to what is today accepted as standard. Nast began his drawings within a year or two of Samuel Wilson's death. But there is no evidence that he drew from life. There are Tailleur, however, is one thing, personality another And while it is as certain as Monday morning that Samuel Wilson would have as soon submitted to one of his own butcher knives as worn stars and stripes, it is equally certam that the kindly smile behind the fictitious whiskers, the shrewdly twinkling eye, the thoughtful brow and the big, capable hands of the cartoon were his We must give due credit to the acorn. Samuel Wilson was Uncle Sam.

Curiosa Americana

By Elmo Scott Watson

Coincidence in Samoa

THIS is a story of three Ripleys. Back in the nineties Lieut. Charles S. Ripley of the United States navy was shipwrecked in the South seas and landed upon an island in the Samoan group. He was taken before the ruler of the island, King Malietoa, who asked the officer his name and who then astonished him by greeting him as "cousin."

The explanation was simple. Many years before, a great-uncle of Lieutenant Ripley, a native of Maine, had sailed for the Orient and had never returned. He, too, had been shipwrecked in Samoan waters, had married a native princess and founded the dynasty of which King Malietoa was the third generation.

King Malietoa insisted upon adopting Lieutenant Ripley and several years later an international commission, composed of representatives of the United States, Great Britain and Germany, then engaged in settling the question of sovereignty over the Samoan islands, settled upon him as the true heir to Malietoa's throne. Ripley, however, declined to exercise his right as king and returned to the United States to make his home in Colorado.

Coincidence in Samoa? Yes, and in the United States, too. In one of his radio broadcasts a few years ago, Robert L. Ripley, the "Believe It or Not" man, told that story. Soon afterwards he received a letter from Mrs. Charles L. Ripley in Denver saying that at the very moment his broadcast came to an end, Lieutenant Ripley had died!

Sacred Harp Singers

SOMETIME in the late summer go down into the South and attend a convention of the Sacred Harp Singers. When you do, close your eyes as they sing and feel yourself transported from modern America back to Elizabethan England.

For the Sacred Harp Singers cling to the "fa-so-la" singing of that far-off period, the "fa-so-la" being the names of the notes with which the major diatonic scale began. Because they have refused to take into consideration the "do-ra-mi" and "si-do" added later, they have been called a "lost tonal tribe."

The Sacred Harp Singers have borne that name for almost a century, taking it from a book of hymns called "The Sacred Harp," published in Philadelphia in 1884. First compiled by B. F. White and E. J. King of Georgia, it has gone through many editions and many hymns have been added.

On some week-end between early July and early September, when their crops "have been laid by," the Sacred Harp Singers gather for a convention. The president opens it with a song, then a chapter from the Bible is read and the chaplain leads the group in prayer. Thereafter the Sacred Harp people frequently sing all day with ten-minute recesses every hour and a half.

"A Dollar Down and . . ."

IF YOU think buying on the installment plan is a modern custom, consider this good advice, offered the housewife in "Decorum—A Practical Treatise on Etiquette and Dress of the Best American Society" in 1877:

Avoid Concealment

Instances frequently occur of concealment with regard to money concerns; thus, for instance, a wife wishes to possess an article of dress which is too costly for immediate purchase, or a piece of furniture liable to the same objection. She accordingly makes an agreement with a seller, and there are many who call regularly at houses when the husband is absent on business, and who receive whatever the mistress of the house can spare from her expenses. A book is kept by the seller, in which payments are entered; but a duplicate is never retained by the wife, and therefore she has no check whatever

We have known an article of dress paid for in this manner, far above its value, and heard of a poor young woman who had been thus duped say to a lady, who remonstrated with her. "Alas! What can I do, I dare not tell my husband!"

It may be that the same system, though differing according to circumstances, is pursued in a superior class of life We have reason to think that it is so, and therefore affectionately warn our young sisters to beware of making purchases that require concealment. Be content with such things as you can afford and such as your husbands approve You can then wear them with every feeling of self-satisfaction, and have a contented mind.

Colored Lightning

Colored lightning is not uncommon. Owing to rain, gases, smoke and other particles in the atmosphere between the observer and the lightning, flashes frequently occur in one solid color. During one storm, says Collier's Weekly, single flashes were recorded in such distinct colors as red, yellow, green, violet, orange and blue as well as white.

Use of the Compass

The Jewish people were not accustomed to the use of a compass 600 years before Christ, nor were they acquainted with its functions. The Chinese, however, are said to have understood the use of the compass 2,000 years before Christ.

Naming Boston, Mass.

Boston, Mass., derives its name from the Lincolnshire Boston, from which town many citizens set sail for New England in 1630 and the next few years.

"The Joke That Wasn't Funny"

By FLOYD GIBBONS
Famous Headline Hunter

YOU know, boys and girls, I don't suppose anybody exactly relishes the idea of death for any reason, but you can't get around the fact that some reasons for dying are more pleasant than others. The long list of the world's martyrs seems to suggest that death isn't quite so terrible when you're dying for a good and worthy cause.

But on the other hand, it must be pretty awful to be facing your doom on account of nothing more important than a practical joke.

That's what happened, though, to Charley Di Giacomo, of Paterson, N. J., on March 8, 1923, at the Peoples Bank in Paterson. Death came for him riding on the butterfly wings of a laugh—came for him at his place of business, just as he was getting ready to leave for the night.

It happened so suddenly that for a moment Charley could hardly realize what had happened. He was putting his books away in the big vault when his friend Bill, another clerk in the bank, called out, "Hurry up, Charlie, or I'll lock you in." Then he heard the door click shut. It was seconds before he realized that that ominous click meant death.

Bill's Thoughtless Gag Threatens to Smother Charley.

Bill hadn't meant to shut that door. He'd only been kidding—only meant to close it part way. But at the last moment the heavy portal had slipped from his hands. Too late he realized he had shut the door to an air-tight vault—a vault in which a man could live only a few hours—a vault equipped with a time lock that couldn't be opened till the next morning!

Bill called Garret Kuiken, the assistant cashier, who was still in the bank. Kuiken called the fire department, and the firemen called out half of Paterson. They got crews from the electric light company, crews of structural iron workers and concrete workers. They sent for an ambulance for they knew Charley Di Giacomo would need it before they got him out. Then they set to work with drills trying to punch a hole through the side of the vault.

While crew after crew arrived on the scene the firemen worked frantically, but their labors were futile. A bank vault is built to keep people out of it, but it isn't an easy thing to GET people out of. And meanwhile poor Bill, the cause of all the trouble, was taken home in a state of collapse, tormented by the thought that his joke had caused the death of his friend Charley.

It Looked as if the Vault Would Be Charley's Tomb.

Again the drills began clattering at the top of the vault. Would he live until they could get him out? That's something Charley didn't know himself. When that door had closed on him it had taken him a few seconds to realize the gravity of his predicament.

"When I remembered that the door couldn't be opened till the next morning," he says, "I was stunned—for how long I cannot say. Everything was quiet. I could hear the thumping of my heart. I felt alone and helpless like a man buried a thousand miles under ground. I pulled myself together. I knew I must keep calm."

The concrete workers arrived and a pneumatic drill was brought into play on the top of the vault. After an hour's work they succeeded in drilling a small hole in the top of the vault. Would Charley still be conscious? The president of the bank just came on the scene, put his mouth to the hole and called: "Are you all right, boy?" There was no answer. But after a moment a piece of twisted paper was thrust up through the opening. On it was scrawled one word, "Hurry!"

There Wasn't Any Air Left for Charley to Breathe.

"At first I could breathe, but I knew that the air wouldn't last long. I was standing up when they began to pound on the sides of the vault. The din was so terrific that I stuffed my fingers in my ears. But I was happy to know that help had arrived.

"The place seemed to be getting hot. Breathing began to be harder. I broke out in a cold sweat and got down on the floor where the air was better. For hours I lay there, gasping for breath. My body was feverish. I began to pray that they would be in time."

Charley's lungs were aching. He was burning up inside. As time went on breathing became almost impossible. His tongue hung out and he licked at the side of the vault because it felt cool. His head was spinning. Tears were rolling down his face. His stomach was turning and he thought he would go mad.

The Cost of Humor Is Pretty High, Sometimes.

"I felt like dashing my head against the walls," he says. "Everything was getting hazy. The end was near when I looked up and saw a hole. I struggled to a chair, stood on it and pushed a note through. Then I fell to the floor, unconscious."

It took them five hours to open a breach in that two-foot-thick wall of battleship steel. Charley's face was blue, his eyes bulging and his tongue hanging out of his mouth when, at last, they got him out into the air.

His hearing was gone and he still can't hear as well as he once could. For weeks he lay in bed recovering from the shock. The doctors say he will never be quite the same again and won't be able to do indoor work for many years. It's a pretty tough price to pay—for another guy's sense of humor.

Snakeroot Poisons Animals

Veterinarians say white snakeroot causes a disease among cattle, horses, and sheep commonly called "trembles." It seems to affect the nervous system. The poisoning is sometimes contracted by human beings from drinking milk or eating milk products from poisoned cows. The disease is called "milk sickness" in man. White snakeroot poisoning is accumulative, according to authorities, and a small amount of the plant eaten over a long period of time may produce the same effect as a large amount eaten at one feeding. Calves and lambs have been fatally poisoned from nursing cows and ewes that had eaten snakeroot.

Discovery of the Tomato

It is not definitely known just when the tomato was found to be non-poisonous and edible or how the discovery came about, says Pathfinder Magazine. But tradition has it that it was a New England man who despite the warnings and dire predictions of his friends first ate of the "love apple" in this country. This fearless fellow is said to have been Michele Felice Corne, an artist whose best known paintings were those depicting naval battles of the War of 1812. And there stands in a cemetery at Newport, R. I., a monument to Corne, the man who took a chance and thereby performed a great service to mankind.

Farm Drainage Is a Timely Subject

Properly Maintained System Is Especially Needed, Says an Expert.

By H D FRITZ, Extension Specialist, University of Illinois.—WNU Service.

Although Illinois farmers have an investment in public drainage systems and private drainage improvements estimated at $150,000,000, this investment in recent years has been taken for granted by the average farmer, and the maintenance of drainage improvements has been neglected.

Proper maintenance of drainage systems is especially urgent now if farmers are to make the most of the soil improvement practices advocated under the new soil conservation program In the new program legumes occupy an important place, and these crops must have a well drained soil. Application of limestone is another practice recommended in the new plan. To be of maximum benefit in making a good stand of legumes possible, limestone applications must be preceded by good drainage.

Individual farmers can improve and aid in maintaining their farm drainage systems by careful inspection and correction of any defects that may be present. Most damage to crops from lack of drainage will be avoided if the outlet channel into which the drainage system discharges is open, is large enough and has sufficient fall to carry away flood water and surface water

An inspection of the tile drain outlet will reveal any damage by freezing and thawing, erosion, silting and stoppage by any cause. Surface inlets and catch basins also require periodic inspection. It is recommended that each farmer learn the location of his tile drains, as he is then better able to check for sink holes and wet spots.

Greater productivity from highly fertile lands that previously were thought to be worthless has proved the effectiveness of the drainage systems Maintaining the drainage systems will aid in maintaining the productivity that has been obtained by drainage

Strip Crops Hold Soil When Wind Whips Field

Strip cropping, one of the best and most economical methods of checking erosion by water, also is valuable in checking wind erosion.

Whether planted on contour lines or at right angles to prevailing winds, strips of sweet clover, alfalfa, sorghum, sudan grass, or sunflowers not only stop soil that starts to blow, but also break the wind as it sweeps across the field. It is small soil particles carried by a high wind that produce the scouring effect known as wind erosion. Strip cropping stops drifting soil in the same way as fences and weed clumps.

Another advantage of strip cropping is that strips may be shifted from year to year. The top growth and roots are plowed under and add humus to the soil. This is one of the best preventives of "blowing." Soil with a good content of organic matter is much less likely to blow than soil cultivated year after year until most of the humus disappears.

Holding Expenses Down

The good farmer knows how to do the various farm operations with the least expenditure of time, energy, and money, but with effective results. He has a knack, developed in youth or acquired in later life, of doing things well. He strives for perfection in every operation, for he knows that failure to do one operation properly will result in trouble in other operations later If the ground isn't broken well before the crop is planted, cultivation will be difficult and harvest small. The good farmer has good habits of work.—Hoard's Dairyman.

OF COURSE, children should never drink coffee. And many grown-ups, too, find that the caffein in coffee disagrees with them. If you are bothered by headaches or indigestion or can't sleep soundly...try Postum for 30 days. Postum contains no caffein. It is simply whole wheat and bran, roasted and slightly sweetened. Try Postum. You may miss coffee at first, but after 30 days you'll love Postum for its own rich, satisfying flavor. It is easy to make, delicious, economical, and may prove a real help. ### BRILLIANT CAST MAKES "SUZY" A NOTABLE EVENT

There is deceiving simplicity in the title of the picture "Suzy" opening at the Lake Theatre, Clear Lake Saturday night. The story is based on the novel by Herbert Gorman and George Fitzmaurice directed the picture for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Franchot Tone and Cary Grant appear in the unique narrative as the two husbands of Jean Harlow, an American show girl stranded in London just before the war.

Miss Harlow unquestionably reaches the high point of her glamorous career as a Star. While the war serves as a background for the plot, it is the sensitive emotional girl who holds the stage as she solves her bewildering problem of love and intrigue.

SUPERINTENDENT'S LETTER

It is a Klemme High School custom to initiate the freshman class into the mysteries of high school life The initiation for this year is set for Friday of this week

On that day townspeople will see the freshmen attired in strange clothes or performing strange tasks Their appearance and their actions will provide fun for everyone--even for themselves for they are good sports

The carrying out of this custom does not mean that we are making a travesty of school for that day. Naturally there will be a few more giggles than usual when the freshmen enter the assembly room in the morning, but classes will not be disrupted, and the freshmen as well as the others, will be expected to have their lessons prepared

The "formal" initiation ceremony will be held in the gymnasium Friday night when the freshmen will be the guests of the sophomores Faculty members will supervise the fun-making and no one will be unduly humiliated

We hope that everyone will accept in the proper spirit the observance of a custom that has really become a tradition in our school and in many other schools

Sincerely yours,
W. Henry Galbreth, Supt.

Funeral Servics Held For Miss Mildred McCullough At Garner

GARNER WOMAN DIED SUDDENLY ON THURSDAY

Garner - Mildred McCullough died Thursday at the home of her parents. Mr and Mrs. C. V McCullough, in northeast Garner, of cerebral hemorrhage, preceded by a coma She suffered a nervous breakdown last winter caused from the strain of 7 years' practice of dental hygiene in 20 of the Gary Ind schools She had seemed to be improving and visited in Des Monies lately

Mildred was born in Welden and came with the family to Garner at the age of 16 She was graduated here with the class of 1916, and after spending several years as book keeper of the Wellemeyer firm in Klemme, studied dental hygiene at Northwestern in Chicago, practiced four years at Tulsa, Okla., and since then at Gary, Ind. Miss McCullough was a member of the United Presbyterian church and of the teachers organization in Gary

She is survived by her parents, her sisters. Mrs Maxine Bachman, Clella of California; brothers, Gerald of California, and Hollis of Garner The funeral was deferred until Monday to await the arrival of Clella who came Sunday night.

Services were held Monday afternoon at the Garner Presbyterian church with Rev. Thompson officiating. Interment was made at the Memorial Park cemetery west of Mason City

In Appreciation

Miss Mildred McCullough worked for the Wellemeyer store some 16 years ago She was our book keeper and office assistant. Altho she was young, just out of high school, she had a great capacity of getting her work done, and had a knack of doing the most important thing first, which made her a valuable employee

She had a wonderfu memory for names and faces and seemed to recognize the telephone voice of all of our customers instantly

She was a person of more than average intelligence and she learned mostly by observation She was one of the most observing people I have ever met. She was very loyal to her friends, the other clerks all liked her and the customers did too

We feel sad that Mildred, so capable and so friendly, should have been called by death at the early age of 37.

Arthur Wellemeyer

Makes Parachute Leap From Over Mile Heigth

FLIRTS WITH DEATH MANY TIMES IN DANGEROUS WORK

Built Own Ballon And Parachute When Still A Young Man

Twenty-five hundred balloon ascensions and parachute leaps is the unique record of Luther Dennis, well-known aerialist who will thrill celebration crowds at the Fall Festival at Klemme, Iowa, on Friday and Saturday, October 2 and 3

But many are the times that this same Luther Dennis sat beneath a rapidly-rising gas bag wondering if he would land safely once again or crash to the earth before thousands of horrified onlookers

Before he was twenty years old Dennis had built his first real balloon and its equipment according to plans evolved from observation and his own genius It took nineteen gallons of coal oil and ten panels of rail fence one hour and a half to fill that small balloon Today, using his own patent inflater, his balloon, which weighs 325 pounds, is ready in fifteen minutes

Small Mishaps Largest

Mishaps of the smallest significance loom large when a man is suspended four or five thousand feet in the air with nothing between him and death but a slender bar and a temperamental muslin bag There is little he can do to adjust a ripping canvas or a fraying rope; the best he can do is to keep his head and wait. Dennis has had many experiences when a cool head was his only hope of escape.

He is not a daredevil, as might be supposed, but he calculates his work with a mathematical precision, and performs it with a confidence born of a passion for aeronautics and an abiding faith in the unalterable laws of physics which he constantly studies.

One can see that ballooning, although an interesting hobby, is a dangerous sport But the hazards are cut to a minimum Mr Dennis like all aerialists folds his own parachute and takes no unnecessary chances in his work

Always Thrilling

For centuries aeronautics was a science expressed by some sort of balloon It was but a short step from these first dubious ventures that could be used for only short flights to the great gas-filled bags that played so effective a part in the world war

The world tires easily of its most novel sensations but the old hotair type balloon and its complement, the parachute continue to furnish the most popular thrills for county fairs and open air assemblies, it still proves to be the drawing card de luxe, evidenced by crowds of curious sight-seers that swarm about the balloonist's furnace

One never gets too old to stand in a break-neck attitude for any length of time following the majestic flight of the aircraft, and with breath-taking absorption await the parachute drop Those first seconds of time before the parachute opens affords a delicious thrill of horror to those who have almost forgotten the sensation of gooseflesh

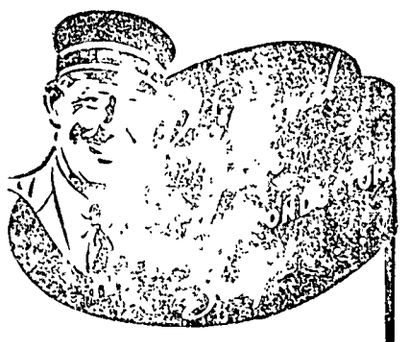
We Pay The Charges



Passengers in the smoking compartment on my train were arguing about why railroad business is picking up.

A factory owner said it was because of this new Free pick-up and delivery of less than carload freight. This is door to door service with no extra charge added to the freight bill.

A traveling salesman said it was because so many passenger and freight trains now run on faster schedules.

There was a school principal in the group and he said it was because train travel is so much cheaper for passengers. He said passenger fares are at the lowest point in history, with substantial reductions if you buy a round-trip ticket—and no more surcharge for riding in sleeping cars.

One man, a farmer, said he liked something he could depend on, that's why he was traveling by train.

Another man, a newspaper reporter, said people were in favor of railroad travel because it is by far the safest. He quoted a lot of statistics from a booklet called, "Live and Let Live."

A banker we all know by name said railroad tax payments mean a lot in this state.

We are proud of railroad achievements, appreciate the public's good will and increased patronage, and pledge continued progress.

PROTECT SEED CORN FROM ROT BY DRYING

Because of the necessity of early field selection of seed corn this year picked seed will be carrying considerable moisture and will be readily susceptible to dry rot. Drying is the most important factor in in checking the development of organisms responsible for this disease

Dry rot may attack corn either internally or externally depending upon the time of infection, the moisture content and resistance of the kernels, and the temperature and the humidity of the atmosphere during and after the infection It is not uncommon in some years to find 10 to 20 percent of seed corn of Iowa so infected

Cross Ventilation Essential

While the best method of drying is to use forced ventilation with hot air at a temperature of 100 to 110 degrees F equipment for doing this is expensive and can be used only by one who handles a large quantity of seed. For small lots of seed a brooder house, farrowing house, or seed corn house can be used if good cross ventilation is provided

During cloudy or rainy days a heater is recommended to drive off moisture. On warm, bright days when the temperature is 90 to 100 degrees F, seed hung on racks out of doors will dry rapidly The corn should be covered or moved inside on rainy days. Seed picked early and hung in the open on a windmill, open porch, or other outdoor place is exposed to variable weather conditions and, although dry at one time, may reabsorb moisture later, which may result in injury to the seed from freezing in the fall or winter months.

Good seed corn is often injured by improper storage Corn with a moisture content below 15 percent will stand a temperature of —5 degrees F. but corn hung in a crib or shed is always in danger A furnace heated room in the basement of the farm house or a room in the attic above a heated room, furnishes an excellent seed corn storage place.

There Are Three Reasons for Lavish Indulgence in Vegetables

One Need Not Be Urged to Feast Upon Fresh Garden Produce.

Those of us who could and did take a hand at planting the vegetable garden early in the season are now enjoying the results of our labors.

When you have helped to dig the potatoes and helped to pick the young green cabbage, the yellow squash, the tender string beans, the tasselled corn and have had a hand in cooking them, they taste like no other vegetables, of course. What a salad ripe tomatoes, crisp cucumbers, lettuce and chicory with a few sweet onions make! It is not necessary for any one to urge vegetables "because they are good for you" upon you.

While we cannot all of us enjoy vegetables just out of the garden and in such large numbers every day, we can indulge in them lavishly at this season of the year when our markets are full of really fresh products not many hours away from the place of their production. They are reasonable in price and, when well cooked and dressed, are satisfying to the palate as well as an asset to nutrition. The minerals, vitamins and roughage which they provide are most important in a well rounded diet.

Tomato Goulash.

¼ cup salad oil.
2 onions (sliced)
2 green peppers (shredded).
2 cups of corn.
8 tomatoes (cut in eighths).
Salt
Pepper

Heat the oil. Add onion and cook until a delicate brown. Add peppers and corn and cook five minutes. Add tomatoes and seasoning and cook until soft.

Vegetable Salad.

1 cup shredded cabbage.
1 sliced cucumber
1 cup diced beets or
2 sliced tomatoes
½ cup French dressing.
1 bunch young onions
1 bunch radishes

Mix cabbage, cucumber and beets or tomatoes with dressing and let stand in refrigerator a half hour. Before serving garnish with radishes and onions.

CURIOUS DEVICES USED FOR SEEING AFTER DARKNESS

It is presumed that man originally toiled or played only during hours of sunlight That when darkness came and the eyes could no longer see—he lay himself down to rest Yet all the while, Nature, through volcanic and meteoric disturbances, through flashes of lightning, was trying to demonstrate to mean its power to create light in the midst of darkness.

Fire was discovered, and man found he could prolong the day with the aid of firebrands, camp fires, torches And firelight was sufficient for his needs. He had no books to read, no socks to mend, nor any night-time chores that required precise seeing.

The earliest lamps of which we have record were saucer shaped objects with a shallow projecting spout which held the wick. A hole in the center of this disc-like lamp held a small quantity of oil.

So far as is known, there was no radical development toward better lighting until 1783 A. D., when Leger of Paris devised a flat ribbon wick and burner. Not long after, Ami Argand of Paris, perfected a glass chimney which, together with his new improved type of circular wick and burner, produced illumination far superior to anything ever before seen.

Then in 1880, Auer von Welsbach, a German, developed a burner, in which the combination of a mixture of air and gas or vapor, heated to incandescence a mantle, composed of thoria and ceria.

Welsbach's mantle was, of course, crude and inefficient compared to present-day mantles. But to Welsbach should go much of the credit for making available to us today, the pure white light which is so easily and economically provided in modern pressure mantle lamps using gasoline or kerosene for fuel

Floyd Gibbons Adventurers' Club Hello Everybody!

"How to Get Killed"

By FLOYD GIBBONS,
Famous Headline Hunter

TODAY, boys and girls, I'm introducing Distinguished Adventurer James Daly of Bronx, N. Y., who tells about the most original method of getting yourself killed that I've heard of in a coon's age

Jim doesn't want to take the credit for that invention of his. He didn't really think the thing out by himself. It just happened that way. If there are any royalties on it, part of them ought to go to the horses. They supplied the power without which the whole scheme would have been a flop.

Jim further wishes to state that he never did think enough of his contraption to have it patented, because he'd rather stay alive than die, even in the most ingenious gadget there ever was.

Besides, nobody but the War department could have any use for the dog-gone thing, and if they want it Jim will be patriotic and give it to them for nothing.

Young Jim Is Introduced to a Disc Plow.

When Jim was a kid of sixteen, his uncle took him out to California to live. That was in 1914. His uncle owned a big farm in Yuba county, about three miles outside of the town of Marysville

About a week after Jim arrived at the farm, his uncle hitched him up a four-horse team and sent him out with a disc plow to bust up some land against planting time. Maybe you've seen one of those disc plows and maybe you haven't. There's a long axle with a row of razor sharp steel discs on it, and over that a seat for the driver. The discs are set sort of cockeyed, coming together in pairs at the front, so that, instead of cutting a straight groove in the ground they throw the soil this way and that.

Jim drove that plow with its set of sharp-edged blades for just exactly a week. Then, on Monday of the second week, things happened. It was around two o'clock and the day was windy The horses were feeling pretty frisky after their Sunday rest, and the work was going along fast.

Piece of Paper Blows Lad Into Terrifying Adventure.

Jim just finished one strip, turned the plow around and was on his way back down the field again when suddenly a gust of wind picked up a bit of paper that was lying on the ground. That bit of paper blew right across the faces of the two front horses The front horses reared. The horses behind them gave a leap forward.

Jim Tumbled in Front of the Razor-like Plow Blades.

Jim, clinging to the reins, was yanked out of his seat. He tumbled to the ground RIGHT IN FRONT OF THE SHINING ROW OF PLOW BLADES. And as he landed, the horses gave another leap and bolted down the field.

Jim tightened his grasp on the reins and held on for dear life. If he let go—Well—figure it out for yourself. Right behind him was that razor-bladed plow—a plow that slashed through the hard, frostbitten ground as if it was so much cheese. Imagine what that plow would do to Jim if it went over him.

Plow Blades Give Imitation of Grim Reaper's Scythe.

Says Jim: "With every step those horses took I could feel a couple of those discs touching my feet. I was dragging along the ground between four crazy horses and twelve circular knives sharp enough to make mincemeat out of me Each one of those discs weighed about twenty pounds, and all I could do was pray the plow wouldn't hit a bump and come down on top of me"

The horses dashed on down the field, dragging Jim with them. They were almost at the end of the field when the thing Jim most feared—happened. The plow hit a bump, leaped up and forward. It came down on Jim's right leg and he felt a stab of pain about his ankle.

They were almost at the end of the field now. Ahead of them was the fence that ran alongside of the main road. The horses ran up to the fence and came to a stop. But still Jim didn't let go of the reins. They were still nervous—those horses. They might bolt again at any moment. Jim's leg was bleeding—still stuck between two sharp blades of the plow. But he didn't dare try to get it out. One move might set the horses to running again. The second he let go of the lines he'd be giving them a chance to run away and drag the plow over him

Jim's Pocket Knife Outwits the Murderous Discs.

Jim began talking to those horses—quietly—soothingly He talked to them for five minutes before it seemed to him that they were sufficiently calmed down. Then he took a chance. He let go of the reins and reached down to see if he couldn't free his leg.

"All I could see was blood," he says, "and try as I might, I couldn't pull my leg loose. Those discs were six or seven inches apart at the top, but at the front they came together at the middle, and my ankle was in between two of them.

"I was lucky enough to have a pocket knife with me, and if it hadn't been for that I guess I'd have been there yet. With the aid of the knife I was just barely able to reach back between the blades and cut my shoe lace. Then I could pull my foot out, leaving the shoe behind."

Life-Long Scars Are Souvenirs of Jim's Experience.

Jim got the foot out, but there were three terrible gashes in the back of his leg where the discs had run over it. He had a good three-quarters of a mile to go before he reached the house and he thought he'd bleed to death before he got there.

His uncle was scared almost as much as Jim was when, finally, he dragged himself into the barnyard. He took Jim to the hospital in town, and Jim lay there for a couple of months. He still has the scars of that experience, and what's more important, he still has the pocket knife that got him out of it. That knife, Jim says, is going to be his rabbit's foot from now on.

Emperor Penguins

Emperor penguins are the largest and rarest of all penguins, and are found only at the earth's southern extremity. They stand from three and one-half to four feet tall, and weigh on the average about seventy-three pounds, but large specimens have been known to reach as much as ninety - four pounds The average temperature of the region they inhabit is fifty degrees below zero. The birds are flightless, using their small highly specialized wings principally to aid them in swimming.

Sweden Thinly Populated

The densely populated countries of Europe may vie with each other in telling of how many persons live to the square mile, but Sweden, if it could do so, might tell how many glades and how many million wild flowers it supported to the square mile, for as much as 12 per cent of that country is occupied by dales and meadows. while over half the country is given up to woodlands. There are countries in Europe with over 60 persons to the square mile. In Sweden there are only a sparse thirty-two.

Dust or Bait Is Army Worm Cure

Calcium Arsenate Used for Some Crops; Poison Bait for Others.

By C. H. Brannon, Extension Entomologist, North Carolina State College.
WNU Service.

There are a number of methods of controlling the fall army worm. Dust calcium arsenate on crops not burned by this material; on other crops such as corn, beans and peas, apply lead arsenate dust to cover the plant thoroughly.

Small plants like alfalfa and crabgrass may be protected with applications of poisoned bait. This is especially recommended where the worms have almost destroyed the crop.

The bait can be made at home with one pound of paris green to 50 pounds of wheat bran. Add two gallons of molasses that have been thinned with water, and stir thoroughly. Then pour in enough water to make the bait crumbly, but not soupy.

Fifty pounds of bait is enough for five acres. Apply it broadcast in the evenings, and do not allow poultry or animals access to treated fields. Smaller amounts of bait can be mixed in the same proportion.

If desired, two pounds of calcium arsenate may be substituted for the pounds of paris green in the bait.

When the worms are migrating, they can be trapped by plowing a deep furrow at right angles to their course of advance. Shallow holes dug at intervals in the furrow and filled with gas oils or kerosene will kill the worms.

Where it is not possible to plow a furrow, a thin line of coal tar placed a little distance ahead of the worms will keep them from invading neighboring fields.

Famous Americans Urged Planting of Red Clover

Just who brought the first red clover to the New World is still a question, but records in the United States Department of Agriculture report that many men famous in Colonial history urged its growth.

As early as 1633, Lord Baltimore asked his settlers to bring good stores of clover seed, but there is no record that they did. William Penn in 1685 tells of success in growing English grass (red clover) and that Robert Turner, a wealthy merchant planter sowed "great and small clover."

Benjamin Franklin, about 1750, wrote that he had "seeded 30 acres to red clover in Philadelphia on the 23rd of August." Nearly 25 years later his "Poor Richard's Almanac" told of "An experienced method of sowing clover on barley."

George Washington in 1786 wrote that seed of red clover was obtainable "on easy terms" in Virginia. It was in these years — the reconstruction period after the Revolution — that extensive cultivation of clover began.

Water Hemlock Poison

Cicuta maculata, also known as water hemlock, is deadly poisonous to live stock. It has such a vile smell when the leaves or stems are broken that one would not expect live stock to eat any of it, but cattle will at times, and with fatal results, especially when the plant is full of sap. Children have been poisoned by eating the fleshy roots, which taste a bit like parsnips. This is a vile plant, which should be killed out or fenced in so thoroughly that no cattle can get to it. The flower heads look a little like wild carrot, but are larger. Most farmers know this plant in localities where it grows, but many do not know its poisonous qualities.—Rural New-Yorker.

For the Farmer

Skimping on protein for pigs wastes other feeds.

Farmers use 26 per cent of all trucks sold in this country.

Noxious weeds can be most easily destroyed during weather that is hot and dry.

According to a recent study, farmers commit less crime than men of any other occupation.

Under average conditions a bushel of corn, when on the cob, will occupy about two cubic feet.

Turnips are largely used in England and Canada for feeding of stock. They grow best in cool weather.

Bone chewing in cattle is a sign of phosphorus deficiency in the ration. Feeding bone meal corrects the condition.

On an average, dairymen raise or purchase enough heifers to replace from one-fourth to one-fifth of their herds each year.

When the pasture becomes drier and the feed scarcer, the cow does not get as much to eat and additional feeding of grain is needed.

Making soil tests in each field and then setting down the results of the tests on a map of the farm will give a permanent record for use in a soil improvement program.

Household Questions

If you have no individual molds, jellies may be molded in muffin tins. Turn the pan upside-down, place hot, wet towel over pan and jellies will slip out easily.

Old hardwood floors do not require refilling when being done over. Apply two coats of thin shellac, rewax whole surface and polish. Floors should be treated in this way twice a year.

When making bread and butter pudding, sprinkle each slice of bread and butter with desiccated coconut instead of currants, and strew some on the top. This will make a change from the ordinary pudding and will be found very tasty.

Japanned articles should never be washed in hot water, as the Japan is likely to wash off. Use lukewarm water and soap

Instead of burning up withered stalks and plants, save them to lay over leaves used to cover flower beds. They prevent leaves blowing away. Burn these stalks and plants in the spring

Refrigerator cookies may be wrapped in waxed paper and kept in refrigerator for several days. Make into a roll and slice when ready to bake.

Lemon slices served with tea are more attractive when sprinkled with paprika or chopped parsley.

Gaspe Peninsula

Cleaning Cod on the Gaspe Peninsula.

Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.

LIKE an out-thrust tongue of land at the wide mouth of the St. Lawrence river lies the Gaspe peninsula, one of the newer onderlands of North America. ith completion of the Perron Boulard in 1928, it was opened to motors around its entire area—about n times that of Rhode Island. This mmer it is being visited by an creasing number of vacationists om the United States.

The climate is literally unique. ere is plenty of bright sunlight no really hot weather. July and gust seldom see more than 75 grees

Thanks to Gaspe's northern latde, it has an hour or so more dayht each day in midsummer than ronto or Boston. Best of all in favored land is the air—once athed, never forgotten. "Atmosric champagne," it has been led.

Here northern outposts of the ant Appalachian Mountain system, tern backbone of the continent m Alabama to Canada, meet the and sink beneath it in a chaos cliff and headland.

Tremendous forces of nature have their mark all over the area. s of erosion have hollowed out e valleys on the northern shore. the south side of the peninsula, cliffs and red pinnacles stand in striking contrast with the e of the water and the green of es.

eneath the waters lie other mouns, worn and leveled by the waves centuries. Into these shallows, in ntless millions, swarm the cod. wn the slopes flow rivers filled h salmon, streams with romantic, sical names—Matapedia, Restouche he Gaspe folk are a strange and eresting mixture.

People Are a Mixed Race

he first settlers were a few Norn and Breton fishermen who anlly made adventurous journeys ross the Atlantic to these famous fishing grounds and finally deed to stay the year round instead returning to France when the son was over.

Next came the Acadians, driven of Nova Scotia. A few of them ched some isolated spots on the th side of the Bay of Chaleur, an fishing, and have been fishing er since.

These Acadians have a distinctive ent and a way of speaking gely produced by their maritime bits. A horse "swings" in its rse to starboard or larboard, as time sailors said—and when you p the steed is "moored."

After the cession of the country to tain came the Channel Islanders, ernseymen and Jerseymen from English islands off the coast of ance. Those English-French newmers, speaking either language h complete facility, as they still settled down in some vacant ces, set to fishing and privateer, and left plenty of descendants hind them.

few years later, about the time the American Revolution, groups "loyalists," or "Tories," left the United States to establish themves at the head of Gaspe Bay and other well-selected spots.

Then the Irish arrived—they, too, settlements of their own—and other group, northern Irish or ttish, of bold sea-roving stock in her case

The Canadian habitant, most pertent and prolific of colonists, fily worked his way along both rth and south shores and set an ample of farming in a country ich so far had been entirely deed to fishing.

Finally, on the St. Lawrence near mouth of the Metis river, at the dward end of the peninsula, was ablished a colony of Scottish and glish settlers.

Revealed by a Highway

Ten years ago only a few outers had any idea of the interest beauty of the Gaspe area, for was difficult of access. The last years, however, have seen ashing changes.

By a remarkable feat of highway gineering, a broad safe 553-mile d, linked with the general sysms of Quebec and New Brunswick, so with those of New England, encircled the entire peninsula. tomobiles can tour the area ere ox carts and dog carts were distanced formerly only by the se and the reckless bicycle. A ular approach is to cross the St. rence from Quebec to Levic. An day's journey eastward, with St. Lawrence at the left of the way growing constantly wider, leads to Metis Beach, one of the most northerly summer resorts of eastern Canada and the first town to be encountered in the Gaspe peninsula. Here at Metis Beach the golfer has his last game, for a while, at any rate. The sportsman who is not afraid of cold water goes for a swim or a sail.

Turning south from there, the road crosses the base of the peninsula, climbing the hills behind the village to the watershed which separates the valley of the Metis river, flowing into the Saint Lawrence, from that of the Matapedia, flowing toward the Bay of Chaleur. Bay of Chaleur rivers, and there are plenty of them, are full of salmon.

The small white town of Carleton was named for an Eighteenth century governor general of Canada. Acadians of the original settlement in 1775 called the place Tracadigeche, from a Micmac word meaning "Place of Many Herons." The name was later changed, under the influence of Americans who came to Gaspe rather than fight against the English in the Revolution. A few miles farther, at the mouth of the Cascapedia river, a road runs off to the north to zinc and lead mines.

Hereabouts there are many farmers, mainly Canadians from the upper part of Quebec. They share their machinery and they have technical advisers from the government, so that their farms although small, are good Farther up the coast, at Cape Cove, have been produced the finest peas in North America.

An Old Codfishing Town

The town of Paspebiac, old-fashioned codfishing center, is an odorous introduction to the authentic Gaspe industry. Down on the beach are warehouses, where many practices have remained the same since the industry began soon after the time of Jacques Cartier, 400 years ago. Cod are stored about as they were by the first local fishermen, in stacks resembling huge pine cones. Cod are split, spread open, and dried so that they are hard and flat as boards. Then they are arranged in cylindrical piles, the lower end smaller than the top and covered by pieces of birch bark held down by stones

A few miles more brings the traveler to Port Daniel, where Jacques Cartier made his headquarters while he explored the Bay of Chaleur. A wide sand bar almost closes the mouth of the Port Daniel river, and most of the village is built on the sand bar. The road for the next 40 miles hugs the shore.

Then suddenly Perce comes to view. On the landward side are red peaks partly covered by greenery, then the tops of three fanglike cliffs and a white village nestling between them and the headlands fronting the bay.

Off shore stands the magnificent Pierced Rock (Rocher Perce) looking like the wall of some huge sea fortress or a monstrous battleship, dwarfing to insignificance the village to which it gives its name. Near its outward end an arch has been cut through by the action of the water. Farther seaward was the sentry tower of the wall, a smaller pinnacle of rock, originally joined to it by another arch which has long since fallen in.

The road from here to Gaspe climbs through mountain valleys and up peaks which are green and rounded on the landward side but fronting the sea as vertical red cliffs. Around the end of the peninsula lies Gaspe Bay. On its south side, along which the road runs, are hills and woods and farms. On the other side stands a range of wooded heights ending in the 700-foot cliffs of Cape Gaspe, a long stone finger pointing southeastward across the mouth of the bay. An extensive drawbridge crosses the bay where the French explorer, Jacques Cartier, discoverer of the St. Lawrence river, took refuge during a storm.

Gaspe village two years ago celebrated a four-hundredth anniversary, with French and British both participating in the ceremonies. A huge granite cross was unveiled near the spot where Cartier landed in 1534 and took possession of the soil for France.

The north shore of the Gaspe peninsula provides thrilling automobiling through the wild green Shickshock mountains This worthy range of the Appalachians, rearing to a height of more than 4,000 feet, is strangely shaped. The summits are almost level; the peaks have been washed and ground away, and only the flat foundations are left. In the distance it looks like a barrier wall with higher towers rising here and there above it.

POULTRY FACTS

GRADING PULLETS FOUND GOOD PLAN

Slow Maturing Birds Should Be Discarded.

By J. C. TAYLOR, Extension Poultryman, New Jersey College of Agriculture.—WNU Service.

Best results are obtained from early hatched pullets which, at the time of housing, are graded according to hatching date, maturity, and physical condition. Knowing when the pullets were hatched makes it possible to discard the slow maturing birds, which are low producers.

When housing pullets according to maturity, segregate the birds that show the same maturity as indicated by their comb development and body weight.

Pullets in poor physical condition, as evidenced by a dull eye, crow head, loose feathering and lack of flesh, should be discarded.

Careful grading of pullets at time of housing results in more uniform egg production throughout the year. Unfortunately, many poultrymen do not mark the chick at time of hatching so the pullet flock must be graded on the basis of maturity and physical condition.

Maintenance Ration and Laying Ration Different

Poultry is fed chiefly for one or more of three purposes: growth, egg production, and maintenance

A maintenance ration differs from a laying ration, not in the ingredients, but in proportions, less animal food, or protein, being used.

Whether feeding for growth, egg production, or maintenance, five classes of foods are necessary for poultry, asserts a writer in Hoard's Dairyman.

1. Grains, for energy, heat, flesh and egg-forming materials. Usually fed in two forms: ground, called "mash" and in the kernel, called "scratch feed"

2. Greens, as aid to digestion, for their health-giving and growth promoting properties.

3. Animal foods, rich in egg- and flesh-forming materials; the most essential as well as the most expensive and most frequently lacking ingredient in all laying rations.

4. Mineral matter, as an aid to digestion and to supply material for egg shells and bone structure. Examples: high-grade limestone grit, oyster shells, and charcoal. Keep these accessible to the fowls at all times. Feed a small amount of table salt in all mashes.

5. Water. Quenches thirst, regulates body temperatures, transports nutrients, and eliminates wastes.

Rubber Hen Raises Chicks

Among the new uses for rubber is that of serving as substitute for the mother hen in the raising of chicks. The brooder contains an electric heating pad which warms the backs of the tiny chicks just as if they were snuggling under their mother's breast A thermostatically controlled heating unit maintains the temperature of the pad at an even 105 degrees, equivalent to that of the hen's breast. The chicks raise their backs against the under side of the pad so that the heat transfer is accomplished by direct contact. This method replaces the old practice of heating the air in the brooder. The pad is made of special heat-resisting sheet rubber which offers a soft, nonporous and sanitary surface.—Popular Mechanics Magazine.

Crowding on Hen Roosts

While most of the changing and remodelling of poultry houses occurs in the late summer or fall, the one of changing the direction of the roosts is so simple as to merit consideration at any time. The greater number of roosts are still placed parallel to the back wall. In the midwest, this generally means east and west. Experience has conclusively demonstrated that this is wrong. If the roosts are placed at right-angles to the back wall, the flock will distribute itself over the entire roosting area, with little if any crowding.—Montreal Herald.

Substitute for Green Feed

Where green feed is not available, a balanced laying mash reinforced with a potent fish oil should be kept before the birds at all times. The addition of from 5 to 7 and one-half percent of alfalfa leaf meal will, in most cases, provide ample insurance for the lack of this green feed. Where possible, dehydrated alfalfa leaf meal should be used. The use of this leaf meal and a food laying mash should keep the birds in a good, healthy, condition.

Worms in Chickens

Unless there is a heavy infestation it is difficult to determine the presence of internal parasites, but where the birds are heavily infested there is usually an extremely heavy appetite, the birds are thin and often a leg weakness will appear. Where these conditions appear it is safe to assume that the birds are infested. When the birds appear listless and there is any doubt as to the trouble it is best to open and examine the intestines for worms.

Trace Planes in Fog

Mountains enveloped in fog, ships lurking in darkness, airplanes hiding behind smoke of cloud screens or lost above airports can now be made visible as a ghostly half-tone picture on a ground-glass screen. Reflected high frequency sound waves are the key to this magic, says Popular Mechanics. By a process just patented these sound waves are projected as a beam from a noise generator resembling an anti-aircraft searchlight. As the beam strikes, for example, an unseen ship, the sound vibrations are deflected and modified in varying intensities by the shape of the ship and are picked up by a sound receiver and focused on a light controlling panel.

TAXES—DIRECT AND INDIRECT

Students of government and its increasing demands on the family pocketbook have been pointing out in recent months the disproportionate spread between direct and indirect taxes.

As recently as 1929, they report, the Federal government collected approximately one-third of its income from hidden or indirect taxes, and two-thirds from open or direct taxes.

By 1935, the picture had reversed itself. Then, almost two-thirds of Federal income came from hidden taxes, and approximately one-third from direct taxes.

To the average householder this contrast is significant. Why?

Because, while direct taxes are levied principally on income, gifts, inheritances and the like, indirect taxes worm their way into bills for clothing, food, shelter and other purchases necessary to the American family.

Although ostensibly directed at other incomes, they hit the average worker's earnings after a sort of multiple pass from politician to producer, to retailer, to consumer. Unwittingly they are paid over the counter by the American housewife whenever she buys for the home. Thus lurking in the price of so many necessities, they add insidiously to the cost of living.

Hidden taxes are by no means new. They have been gnawing at American workers' earnings for many years. But the serious thing today is their expansion—with its consequent burden on the family income.

Yet the burden can be lessened

Developed to their present proportions to help finance huge and often wasteful expenditures by politicians, hidden taxes can bo reduced by cutting such waste.

That, of course, is the politicians' job. But it isn't their responsibility alone.

It's the responsibility of us, the people, to tell the politicians—who, under the Constitution, are subject to our control—that such waste, with its consequent raid on the family purse, must end. Or else!

WHO PAYS NEW DEAL TAXES?

In 1930 the wealthy paid 68 o% of government supporting taxes and the poor paid 31 2%. Today the wealthy pay 38 7 percent and the poor pay 61 3 percent.

More than sixty cents of every dollar of the 25 billion dollars the New Deal has spent in a little over three years has hidden in the "soak the poor" hidden tax

Taxes increase the cost of your living 33 1-3 percent because 2· cents of every dollar you spend goes for taxes

Federal taxes are up 110 percent in the fiscal year of 1936 over 1933 but the New Deal has spent twice that amount because with every $2 20 the New Deal is now spending but $1 is being paid in taxes, high as they are the remainder is borrowed money When you sell a bond you borrow money

HIGH SCHOOL NEWS

The freshman initiation provided most of the news for the past week The first year students came garbed in their outlandish costumes Friday morning and put on a program in the assembly room. They continued to wear their special clothes throughout the day until they were given the third degree in the evening Lunch and a volley ball game seemed to soothe most of the sore spots and hard feelings.

The high school baseball team has been active during the past week They have engaged in three games, and, while they haven't turned in a string of victories, they have shown a steady improvement that is encouraging to Coach Kingery

The Shamrock baseball team at Goodell last Thursday afternoon to play their old rivals in the first fall game of the season They gave a good account of themselves but came out on the short end of a 7 to 0 score.

The game was played on practically even terms except for the fourth and fifth innings when a mixture of hits and errors gave Goodell five of their runs.

Monday the local nine traveled to Swaledale where the pitchers, Kaduce and Kluckhohn, held the Swaledale sluggers to four hits, only to lose a 10 to 2 decision on misplays.

Wednesday the boys tangled with Corwith in a duel of many hits Again errors figured in the decision, and the Shamrocks came home just short of victory in an 11 to 10 score.

A local town team composed of alumni and faculty members took the measure of the high school by a score of 4 to 3 in a practice game Friday

Keeper and Brinkman formed the battery for the all-stars. Kaduce and Kluckhohn did the pitching and Schuldt, the catching for the high school A return game between these two teams is expected soon

Orchestra members get up early these days They practice Wednesday and Friday mornings at 8 15.

RAINS, FROST INCREASE DANGER OF POISONING

Recent rains which have started new growths of sudan grass or sorghum have increased the danger of livestock being poisoned by prussic acid Early frost will also increase that danger The only safe practice is to keep livestock off of sudan grass or sorghum if it has been stunted by drouth or after it has been frosted The stunting of the plant by drouth, frost or other conditions followed by new growth apparently causes the development of prussic acid

Curing Eliminates Danger

Fortunately curing the sudan grass or sorghum and making silage, fodder or hay out of it will eliminate the danger of poisoning from prussic or hydrocyanic acid

Fodder or hay however must be well cured before the prussic acid is eliminated

Horses or hogs apparently are seldom injured by the prussic acid poisoning but occasional cases of their death have been reported Cattle and sheep, however, are quite susceptible

Livestock affected by the poisoning usually die a few minutes after eating the forage. Sometimes only a few mouthfuls are needed to kill the animal

Feed Starchy Grains

Giving cattle or sheep a starchy feed, such as corn or grain sorghum, will help avoid danger of prussic acid The starch in the grain forms glucose in the digestive tract of the animal, which aids in preventing the formation of the poison This is not a sure protection against poisoning but merely helps to lessen the danger

500 ATTEND DEDICATION OF NEW MESERVEY GYM

Meservey --An attendance estimated at 500 was at the gym-auditorium dedication Friday night, including several from other towns The program consisted largely of music and class numbers by the school children, a vocal solo by Mrs D M Farran and a piano solo by the Rev E Kampman Talks were made by G E Raecker, president of the school board, Rev Kampman and the Rev Orth

A few days ago Policeman Michael F Hally of New Haven stopped Mrs Roosevelt wife of the President, for running past a red light in her automobile. When the First Lady explained that she was watching a street car in front of her at the time, the cop ungallantly replied "You wasn't watchin' nothin' "

"What would I get" inquired the man who had just insured his property against fire "if this building should burn down tonight ?"

"I would say" replied the insurance agent "about ten years"

What's a ROORBACK ?

Yes, many of us know that it's a political campaign falsehood used to advantage by an opposition party. But just when did the "roorback" start, and where did it get its name? You can trace the origin of many such political terms in a new series of historical articles to appear in this paper . . .

That Third Party !??!!?!??!

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

FOR the first time in more than a decade there's a third party in the field during a Presidential campaign and this year, as in the past, it has the two leaders guessing.

That worried look in the eye of the Democratic donkey and that furrowed brow of the Republican elephant are caused by the minds of both pondering over such unsolved questions as these:

How much strength will this new Union party develop between now and November 3?

How many popular votes will their candidate, William Lemke, get and how many of them will he be taking away from my candidate?

Will he get enough electoral votes to affect the election and, if so, which way will they swing it — to me or to my opponent?

If history repeats itself this year, they have plenty of cause for worry, because third party movements in American political history have always been a headache for the two major parties. Of course, none of them has ever succeeded in electing a President and in only seven campaigns has one of them showed enough strength to be represented in the electoral college vote. But at least twice their entrance into the campaign has meant the difference between victory and defeat for one of the major parties.

How They're Born

Third parties, in the usually accepted sense of the term, are brought into being when insurgents within an old party rebel against its policies or its candidate, walk out on the parent organization, organize a new one and nominate a candidate of their own. The first of these "insurgents" was the Peace party of 1812-15, composed of Republicans (forerunners of the present Democrats) and Federalists, mostly in New England, who were opposed to the second war with England. However, this group didn't play any important part in political history any more than did the so - called Peoples party of 1824, composed of Republicans who favored having Presidential electors chosen by the people instead of having the state legislatures do it for them. The next year a Coalition party, thus designated because of the union of the supporters of Henry Clay with those of John Quincy Adams, helped defeat Andrew Jackson and elect Adams.

But an authentic third party did not appear on the scene until the election of 1832. Six years earlier a certain William Morgan of Batavia, N. Y., who had published a book purporting to reveal the secrets of Masonry, disappeared and the members of that fraternity were accused of having kidnaped him and drowned him in the Niagara river. They were also accused of blocking the investigation of Morgan's disappearance and from western New York opposition to the Masons spread to other Eastern states.

Several young politicians, among them Thurlow Weed of New York and Thaddeus Stevens of Pennsylvania, seized upon this prejudice to further their ambitions and the result was the organization of an Anti-Masonic political party.

In September, 1830, this party held a national convention in Philadelphia, the first of its kind in this country. It was attended by 96 delegates from 10 states and out of it grew another convention in Baltimore the next year to be attended by as many delegates from each state as there were representatives in both houses of congress (the forerunner of our present convention system).

The Baltimore convention nominated for President, William Wirt of Maryland, who had been attorney-general in Monroe's cabinet, and for vice-president it named Amos Ellmaker of New York. In the election of 1832 these candidates won only the electoral vote of Vermont. Later this party was absorbed by the Whigs and lost its identity.

First Liberty Party

Attempts to organize the anti-slavery vote in the late thirties resulted in the formation of the

MILLARD FILLMORE

Liberty party. It nominated for the Presidency James G. Birney, a former Kentucky Democrat and slave-owner, who sold his slaves, moved North and became an Abolitionist. However, the Liberty party didn't figure very prominently in the roaring "Log Cabin-Hard Cider" campaign of 1840 between Harrison, the Whig, and Van Buren, the Democrat, and it could muster only 7,369 votes for its candidate. Birney was nominated again in 1844 and this time he polled 62,263 votes but in neither campaign did he get a single electoral vote.

Four years later another abolitionist party was in the field. It resulted directly from a split in the Democratic party over the slavery issue. When Gen. Lewis Cass of Michigan was nominated at the Baltimore convention of that party, the "Barnburner" faction (so-called because, they were "willing to burn the political barn to get rid of the rats in it") bolted the convention and made plans to hold one of their own.

This meeting was held in Utica, N. Y., and it nominated Ex-President Martin Van Buren, who had been denied renomination by the Democrats in 1844 when they turned to the first "dark horse" in our political history—James K. Polk of Tennessee.

Later in the year a group of dissatisfied Whigs withdrew from that party and joined forces with bolting Democrats to hold a convention in Buffalo, N. Y. It also nominated Van Buren for President.

As the Free Soil party it was able to poll only 291,000 votes, but it caused the Democrats to lose New York's 36 electoral votes, which was just enough to give Gen. Zachary Taylor, the Whig candidate, the 36 votes he needed to defeat Cass.

In 1852 the Free Soilers nominated Senator John P. Hale of New Hampshire, who had been a Jacksonian Democrat and had quit the party over the slavery issue. By this time the Free Soil vote had dropped to 157,000 and had no effect on the contest between Gen. Winfield Scott, the Whig candidate, and Franklin Pierce, the Democrat, who was elected.

The Know Nothings

In the meantime, however, another third party had come into existence which, during its brief existence, figured in the electoral college returns. That was the political group known as the Native American party or Know-Nothings. It originated in New York City in the forties as a result of the large emigration from Ireland during the famine years when the potato crop failed. Out of the resentment against these "foreigners" grew a secret society, the "Supreme Order of the Star Spangled Banner" and a political party, the Native Americans, with a platform of opposition to aliens, the papacy, infidelity and socialism.

The popular name of Know-Nothings was attached to the party because when its members were questioned about it they invariably replied "I don't know." In 1847 they held a national convention in Philadelphia where they nominated Gen. Henry Dearborn for vice-president and recommended, but did not formally nominate, Gen. Zachary Taylor for President.

The Know - Nothings do not seem to have played much part in the election of 1852 but they figured strongly in the campaign of 1856. By this time they had thrown off the secret character of their organization and revealed the fact that most of their members were Whigs.

The remainder of the Whigs, along with the Free Soilers, and many Northern Democrats, had gone over into the new Republican party which nominated Gen. John C. Fremont and adopted the revised slogan of "Free Soil, Free Speech and Fremont." In February the Know-Nothings held a convention in Philadelphia where they formally renamed their party the American Party. For President they nominated Millard Fillmore, the Whig vice-president who became President when Zachary Taylor died in office, and for vice-president A. J. Donelson of Tennessee.

The Republicans polled more than 1,000,000 votes and the Native Americans nearly 900,000. But James Buchanan, the Democratic candidate, got 174 votes in the electoral college as against Fremont's 114 and Fillmore's eight—those of Maryland. By the time the next Presidential campaign came around the Know-Nothing party had been merged with the Republican.

The campaign of 1860 was marked by the paradox of two "third parties" both of which developed enough strength to break into the electoral college vote. One of them represented a split in a regular party and the other a coalition of odds and ends from various parties.

The Democratic party, divided by the slavery question in previous campaigns, was split wide open in this crucial year of 1860 The Northern wing of the party nominated Stephen A. Douglas of Illinois and the Southern, or pro - slavery wing, nominated John C. Breckenridge of Kentucky, who had been Buchanan's vice-president. Breckenridge got 72 electoral votes as compared to Douglas' 12.

The other "third party," which represented a coalition, was the Constitutional Union party, made up of old-time Whigs and Know-Nothings, who would avoid the issue of slavery and achieve the impossible goal of harmony throughout the country. Their nominee was John C. Bell of Tennessee who polled 39 electoral votes. The three candidates received a total of 123 votes and Lincoln 180.

Bolters Galore

The campaign of 1872 was a mixed - up affair with crossing over of party lines and bolters galore. A faction of the Republican party, dissatisfied with the certainty of Grant's renomination, walked out, held another convention in Cincinnati and chose Horace Greeley for President and B. Gratz Brown of Missouri for vice-president. The Democrats decided that a fusion ticket was their only hope.

Therefore, when they held their convention in Baltimore, they also nominated Greeley and Brown. But this action was offensive to the old-line Democrats who in turn walked out and held a convention in Louisville, Ky., where they nominated Charles O'Conor of New York for President and gave him John Quincy

WILLIAM WIRT

Adams of Massachusetts for a running mate. O'Conor polled only a little more than 29,000 votes but Greeley didn't do much better and, bitterly disappointed over his poor showing, he died in less than a month after the election. As a result the Democratic electors scattered their vote, giving 42 to Thomas A. Hendricks of Indiana, 18 to B. Gratz Brown and two to Charles J. Jenkins of Georgia. Grant won overwhelmingly with a total electoral vote of 286.

To Gen James B. Weaver of Iowa goes the distinction of being the only man who was ever the leader of two different third party movements and as the head of one of them he succeeded in breaking into the electoral college vote. Dissatisfaction of the farmers with the financial policies of President Grant resulted in the formation of the Greenback party by inflationists who wanted to issue a large amount of paper money without regard to specie payment. In the campaign of 1876 they nominated Peter Cooper of New York but he polled only 80,000 popular votes and failed to receive a single electoral vote.

In the congressional elections of 1878 the Greenbackers cast more than a million votes and when they nominated Weaver, a man from the agricultural west, for President m 1880 the Republicans were deeply concerned. But their fears proved groundless for the Greenbackers were able to muster only about 300,000 popular votes and not a single one in the electoral college.

The Populist Era

But a decade later the G. O. P. had real cause for worry. Populism, which championed the cause of the farmer and the working man, was running through the West like a prairie fire. In the state and congressional elections of 1890 the Populist or People's party carried the legislatures of Kansas and Nebraska, elected nine members of congress and forced 34 others, Republicans and Democrats, to pledge themselves to carry out Populist ideas about free silver, public ownership of monopolies postal savings banks and an income tax.

Then Weaver, the former Greenback, bobbed up as a Populist leader and in 1892 won their nomination for the Presidency. In the election he polled more than 1,000,000 votes in the West and got 22 electoral votes. By 1896 the Democratic party had adopted so many of the Populist principles that William Jennings Bryan received their indorsement for President although they nominated their own candidate for President, Thomas E. Watson. Eventually they were gradually absorbed by the two major parties.

After the Populist movement two decades were to elapse before there was another third party movement but when it came it unseated a party which had long been in power. The story of that third party is too familiar to need more than the barest mention here. In 1912 Ex-President Theodore Roosevelt led a revolt against the renomination of William Howard Taft, formed the Progressive or "Bull Moose" party, corralled 88 electoral votes and brought about the victory of Woodrow Wilson over Taft, 435 to 8.

Twelve years later the Progressive party, this time under the leadership of Senator Robert M. LaFollette of Wisconsin, again played a part in a Presidential campaign although it was not a decisive one. For Calvin Coolidge could have given John W. Davis LaFollette's 13 electoral college votes and he would still have won the election.

As for 1936—will it be a repetition of 1912 with this year's third party playing a part in defeating an occupant of the White House who is seeking re-election? Will it be a repetition of 1848 and aid in defeating one of the two major party leaders even though it doesn't register a single vote in the electoral college balloting? Or will it be a repetition of those other years in which there were third parties in the field and they didn't affect the result either way, even though they were represented in the electoral vote?

World's Chemists Busy
The New Hell-Broth
Our Huge Gold Pile

The great fighters in Asia and Europe in the days of Frederick the Great and Napoleon had little idea of war's future. But marvelous things, some of the greatest, Napoleon especially, might have done with today's inventions.

Arthur Brisbane

Frederick the Great's father selected the tallest men he could find for his guard, probably kept them away from the firing line. In battle they would have been killed first, hit by the bullets that go over the heads of shorter men.

The wholesale killers of the old days prepared their killings by marching men up and down, drilling them, encouraging them with titles, brass bands to lead them, fancy uniforms. All that means little now.

About 100 miles from Berlin there is a station called Leuna. There most useful work is done, in theory and through study of the manufacture of synthetic petroleum; and there most important, learned men with big heads, spectacles and an amount of education that would make you dizzy if you could imagine it, concentrate their brains on the preparation of better, more efficient poison gases and high explosives.

Every country has its similar death laboratory; men perhaps as efficient as those of Germany, though Germany is the kingdom of chemistry, the teacher of other nations.

Henry Irving, on the stage of his theater in London, prepared an impressive presentation of the witches in "Macbeth," old, toothless hags, preparing their hell-broth, with power to summon spirits from the dead and make them foretell the future.

Far more efficient are those solemn German chemists, physicists and other professors, preparing the real hell-broth of poison gas, upon which the future of civilization and the domination of the earth may depend for many centuries.

We had our periods of universal barbarism and cannibalism, our ages of flint, bronze and iron, our many interesting forms of rulership, planned to give one or a few control over all the others. We had the age of military feudalism, and many think that we are now seeing the end of "industrial feudalism." There may be in the centuries ahead of us a period of airplane-poison gas rule, which will make the peoples of the world as completely subject to a single dictatorship as were the ancient galley-slaves, swinging their oars under the lash.

There are a good many things we haven't seen and many to which we devote too little thought, including perhaps the fact that it is dangerous to be too rich if you are not prepared to defend yourself against burglars.

Those thousands of millions in gold that we are hiding away in a hole in the ground, as ingenuously as any squirrel hiding his hickory nuts, may bring us trouble some day.

The thought of those ten thousand millions' worth of gold bars and dollars, hidden not very far below the surface, might cause some ingenious Asiatic or European to say to himself:

"For one or two billions I could prepare the necessary machinery, flying ships and poison gas included, to conquer the necessary areas of the United States and frighten the others into submission. Having laid down my layer of gas, I would descend and take the ten thousand millions and go home with a clean profit of eight billions in gold."

Mussolini races his big Italian built automobile, the engine burning alcohol, made of Italian farm products—no gasoline. Some lawmakers in America suggest compelling the use of 10 per cent alcohol in all fuel for American automobiles. Fuel alcohol can be made from corn, and the law, it is said, would give work to 2,000,000 men on 30,000,000 acres of farm land.

It seems impossible to believe the hideous accounts of the maltreatment and cruel deaths inflicted upon women in the civil war now raging in Spain.

That men should fight and murder each other is to be expected, since they are at best "half tiger, half monkey," and often the monkey gives way to the tiger. But that they should inflict shameful ill treatment and hideous death on defenseless women seems utterly unbelievable, even when you know what men are, in a mob.

Happiness

TRUE happiness can never be founded upon falsehood. The profits of lying are much over-estimated. It pays to be true. At least we shall be at peace with ourselves. Where is happiness? It is to be found in the world all about us, in the stillness of a summer night, in the pride of a good thing done, in the flush of a summer dawn, the following of an ideal, the strong grip of a friend, the perfect heart of a rose, or the wild sweetness of a song. It is always very near.—Dame Nellie Melba

Golden Anniversary

According to an insurance company, the chances of celebrating a golden anniversary depend entirely upon one's age and that of the consort at the time of the marriage. Taking an average case in which the bride is twenty years of age and the bridegroom twenty-five years of age, the chances that they will both survive and celebrate their golden anniversary is 168 out of every 1,000, or about one in six.

Moroccans Take Part in Spanish War

African Troops Are Resented by Loyal Spaniards

This picture of four Moroccan soldiers gives an idea of the type of fighting men imported to Spain by the rebel commander, Gen. Francisco Franco, to aid in the bloody war on the loyalist government of President Azana.

Many native Spaniards have resented the importation of foreign troops, and it is believed to have alienated the support of many rebel sympathizers. While no one can doubt the value of the Moroccans as fighting men, the invasion of the Moors centuries ago still lingers in the minds of the Spanish people.

British diplomats are making desperate efforts to prevent intervention in Spain. The failure of Portugal to join in a general pact has been a disturbing factor. Portugal has declared she must retain freedom to act should Communist propaganda menace internal security.

Japanese Priests Prepare for War

Drill Daily for Day When War Will Come

With bayonets belted to their priestly robes and rifles over their shoulders, the clean shaven young priests of the Sodo sect of the Buddists engage in military drill on the grounds of their temple in Japan. A military officer from the nearest garrison comes to drill them every morning.

Japan's successes in Manchukuo and the general belief that sooner or later war will come has aroused the people's military spirit, and the war party seems to be in full control.

The latest disturbing news from that quarter is that Japan is taking advantage of the escape clause of the London pact to increase her strength in submarines. This can be done only when one of the signatories of the pact considers its national defense in jeopardy. Secretary Swanson has declared Japan's action is a clear violation of the agreement. No official action has yet been taken by the State department.

UNIFORM TRAFFIC LAWS

In the interest of uniform traffic laws for the entire country, a conference on street and highway safety was held in Washington. Those sponsoring the conference rightly believe that the wide diversity of traffic regulations now in effect tends to increase the number of accidents which occur

With each state, county and city a law unto itself in traffic matters it is inevitable that tourists and other travelers find it difficult to keep informed of the varying rules of the many different communities through which they pass.

At the conference considerable discussion of speed regulations was had, after which it was voted to recommend a uniform limit of twenty miles an hour for both business and residential sections of the cities, except at street intersections and school zones, when it should be reduced to fifteen miles an hour.

Such a speed limit rigidly enforced would conduce to greater safety than the freakish ordinances which exist in some places that prescribe a much less speed, but which no one pays any attention to As a matter of fact, no arbitrary speed limit can insure safety when drivers fail to use common sense

But whatever speed or other regulations are determined upon should be uniform throughout the entire country and the movement toward that end should have the hearty support of every community in the nation.

GREELEY'S HANDWRITING

Many stories have been told about Horace Greeley's notoriously poor handwriting, which was a constant nightmare to his associates, and especially to the printers on the old New York Tribune, which he founded

One printer, being given a Greeley manuscript to set up for the first time, exclaimed· "My God, if Belshazzar had seen this writing on the wall he would have been more terrified than he was." Later it is said, Greeley wrote to the foreman directing that the printer be discharged because he made so many typographical errors. The printer got hold of the note before leaving and carried it to the foreman of another newspaper as a recommendation—and got a job immediately

Once Greeley was invited to lecture in Sandwich, Ill He wrote that he was overworked and would be sixty years old on February third, and felt unable to take the engagement. After much labor in deciphering the letter, the committee replied they would be glad to have him lecture on February third, and that the fee of sixty dollars would be satisfactory.

To Parents or Guardians

About the middle of next week the report cards for the first six weeks period will be sent out to the parents The teachers will appreciate having the parents read these cards carefully and return them promptly

Parents are urged to make in quiries concerning any marks that are not clearly understood The signature of the parent or guardian should mean that any misunderstanding has been cleared up

The cards for the grades and high school are of the conventional type Markings will be made in letters rather than in numbers however The teachers feel that they can do more justice in grading by placing students in five classes rather than in 100 The letter grades will have no particular number equivalent but will stand for the general class ranking designated in the legend on the card

Five Thousand People Here Saturday Evening

KLEMME'S CELEBRATION DREW IMMENSE CROWDS

Night Stage Show Finest In North Iowa, Said Many Visitors

Klemme's two day Fall Festival is now history, but the account of this celebration will go down in the records as one of the biggest, cleanest and finest celebrations in the history of the town

The free attractions, the rides, concessions, stage show and other attractions were all that they were advertised to be Joy Gould's Million Dollar Spectacle night show was immense, it was clean, and it was full of fine entertainment for young or old The show was interspersed with a variety of acts and entertainment The lighting and scenic effects were beautiful on the specially constructed stage that covered the entire intersection on Main Street

Dennis Made Nice Flight

Luther Dennis made a fine balloon flight Friday afternoon and thrilled hundreds with his performance Because of a continued high wind he was not able to make the flight Saturday Mr Dennis is a gentleman who is sixty-two years old and in his forty-two years of balloon work has made over twenty-six hundred flights

Good Circus Acts

DuBell's Swiss Alpine Wonder Dog acts were far ahead of most dog performances. Some of their acts were really marvelous and they had a good variety of stunts

The Aerial Christensen's thrilled crowds with their high trapeze and ladder acts both afternoon and evening

Yo-Yo, the clown, had a variety of stunts and was especially amusing for the kiddies, although the grown-ups got a big kick out of his antics Yo-Yo put on a clown trapeze act Saturday night that was excellent and difficult to perform.

Plenty Of Rides

The Art B Thomas Shows, who book with Mr. Gould, had a fine variety of rides including a merry-go-round, ferris wheel, loop-the-loop, kiddie ride, minature auto rides and pony rides A police dog which belonged to Mr Thomas furnished thrills for the crowds who delighted in watching the dog ride on the ferris wheel of his own accord When the dog would tire of the ferris wheel he would go to the loop-the-loop and bark until the proprietor let him ride Then he would go and jump on the merry-go-round, and then back to the ferris wheel.

The concessions provided clean amusement along the midway and there were no gyp gambling games allowed

Dance Goes Over Big

The dance each evening drew immense crowds and dancers were more than pleased with the fine ten-piece orchestra which furnished the music A portable floor was leased for the two nights. Over a thousand people enjoyed dancing during the two nights.

Local Man Wins Prize

Bill Schwartz, Klemme, was awarded the choice of $50 in cash or a trip to Collander, Canada, to see the Dionne Quintuplets. The judges were selected from Belmond, Garner and Clear Lake

Plan For Next Year

So well pleased were visitors to the Klemme celebration who were amazed that a town of 500 population could put on an entertainment equal to the large fair night shows, business men are expressing their desire to contract with Jay Gould for 2 or 3 days next summer

Large Crowd Saturday

Without a doubt, the crowd in Klemme Saturday night was the largest crowd ever in Klemme. A Klemme man estimated the crowd by counting the people in a given space and then counted "sections" with the result that he figured there were between 4,500 and 5,000 people who saw the night show and who were on the midway

A good crowd was in town Friday afternoon, and the evening crowd was considerably larger, perhaps 2,000, but the Saturday crowd was really immense Counting the two afternoons and the two evenings around 10,000 people visited in Klemme.

Good Show Troupe

The Jay Gould company and the Art B Thomas Shows were composed of a fine group of people They conducted themselves as ladies and gentlemen and were a fine group to deal with There was not a single rough-neck in the outfit and everyone connected with either company were courteous and polite

Liked Klemme

Mr Gould told a Times reporter that his people were impressed by the fine reception they were given in Klemme They remarked that the people of Klemme were unusually friendly and that the business men were a very fine class to deal with The entire company were impressed with the beauty and neatness of our little city and were surprised o see so many modern homes, well kept lawns and a fine park, as well as noting the two fine churches recently built.

FLOYD GIBBONS ADVENTURERS CLUB

Hello Everybody

"Death Dive"

By FLOYD GIBBONS,

YOU know, boys and girls, it's always the unexpected thing that makes all the trouble in this world. If a man could foresee everything that was going to happen, he could do pretty well by himself in the matter of keeping out of jams.

But no matter how carefully you do your figuring, there's always something you forget to take into your calculations, and that's always the thing that makes everything go haywire.

Maybe we're lucky that we can't foresee everything. Life would be pretty drab if we always knew just what was going to happen. There'd be no adventures, and there'd be no Adventurers club.

Take the case of just one man for example. He is Gene Hamilton of Jackson Heights, N. Y., and he most certainly would not have made the Adventurers club if he had been able to calculate correctly before he took a walk sixty feet above the river that day back in 1919.

"Head Man" of Kid's Gang Takes Tough Assignment.

In 1919, Gene was just ten years old, and the unofficial leader of a gang of kids in the town of Bridgeport, Michigan. Gene held his leadership over those kids by always being the first one to try any new stunt or do any new trick. And it happened that there was a new stunt to be tried.

For weeks, that gang of kids had been watching the building of a new railroad trestle over the small river that ran between Saginaw and Bridgeport. It was all but completed, and ten-year-old Gene had announced that he was going to be the first one to walk across it.

The kids thought it was pretty brave of Gene to walk that trestle. It was sixty feet high, and to a kid it looked like a hundred. And to make matters worse, it was only a single track affair and if a train ever caught you while you were on it—well—it was just curtains, that's all. But to Gene it didn't look like such a tough assignment.

Gene Was "Cagey" in Learning Train Schedules.

The only thing he was afraid of was the height, because, unknown to the other kids, he had made a few inquiries and found out at just what time the trains went by. According to his calculations walking that trestle would be just as safe as walking across the old foot bridge a little way down the river.

But you know, and I know that calculations aren't worth a darn when the unexpected starts to happen! The day the bridge was finished, Gene started his epochal trip across it. Leaving the other kids standing at the foot of the embankment he climbed up to the train level.

By the time he reached the top it began to look higher than it had from below. He set his foot on the first tie, looked at the water rippling along far beneath him and began to wish he hadn't started that trestle walking business in the first place.

Train Whistle Interrupts Boy Hero's Trestle Stroll.

The trestle looked a mile high and a mile long. He hesitated, but the kids, seeing that, set up a derisive yell. Gene bit his lip and moved on.

"I took ten—fifteen—twenty steps," he says. "Then I stopped. There was no walking space—no girders—nothing on either side of the narrow track that I could jump to in case a train should come along. Funny I hadn't noticed that before. With my heart in my throat I started again. It wasn't long before I had reached the middle, but the force of the wind on my back and occasional glimpses of the water far below were adding to my uneasiness.

"I heard a distant cheer from my pals. And then—I heard something else!" What Gene heard was the unmistakable note of a train whistle—and the whistle was close by.

It Looked as Though Little Gene's Goose Was Cooked.

In a panic he looked ahead. Nothing there. Balancing carefully on two ties he turned around. Not three hundred feet away and coming at express speed was—the repair train!

The repair train! That was something Gene hadn't taken into his careful calculations. "It was evident that the engineer didn't see me," he says, "and I knew, from having seen many trains stopped, that this one could never be brought to a halt in time to save me. It would be equally impossible for me to beat that train across the trestle. If I tried to run, my legs would slip through the wide-spaced ties. And there was nothing to cling to on either side of the trestle, either. It looked as though my goose was cooked."

The ugly iron monster was on the bridge now. Gene heard cries from below and the shrill screaming of steel on steel as the engineer saw him and jammed on the brakes. Through the gaps between the ties he saw the water—it seemed to be miles away—and he knew that to jump was the only possible way to save his life.

Submerged Piling Nearly Digs Him a Watery Grave.

Still the engine came on. Gene felt the heat of it on his bare legs, and then he threw himself sideways, lashing out with his arms in a desperate hope that he might find something to cling to. With a burst of steam and a grinding of wheels, the train slid by above him. His leg bumped something. He clutched aimlessly at the empty air, and then he was falling—falling.

Says he:. "The rushing air first cleared my head, then I felt faint. A sharp, tearing ache seemed to come suddenly in my left shoulder: then—oblivion!"

When Gene came to again there was no pain in his shoulder. It was in a cast, and he was in the hospital. He had fallen on an old piling partly submerged in the water, and if some older boys hadn't been on the spot, Gene might have finished his trestle walking stunt in a watery grave. "So," he says, "trains hold little attraction for me. Nowadays, whenever possible, I do my traveling by plane or boat."

Jonquil and Narcissus

The name jonquil is often hardy narcissus They are really a distinct species, distinguished by nearly round, rush-like foliage and small golden-yellow, medium to short-cupped flowers, usually borne more than one on a stem, and have a more marked fragrance than most other types. Daffodil is a common name applied to any kind of narcissus, but which correctly refers to several of the hardy type, especially the larger, single flowered trumpet sort It is not the same as a jonquil.

The Mink

Although it has a well-developed personality of its own, the mink (putorius vision) is in many respects a sort of compromise between a weasel and an otter, says an authority in the St. Louis Globe-Democrat. Bigger than a weasel, it is not so large as an otter. Its tail is bushier than a weasel's, but not as thick and heavy as an otter's. Although a good swimmer, it does not devote itself to an aquatic existence. And on the other hand, when on land it generally stays on the ground.

STAR DUST

Movie • Radio

By VIRGINIA VALE

AT LAST something long predicted has happened. A real battle has been described over the air while it was going on. And never has there been a more exciting broadcast. H. V. Kaltenborn, the news commentator, stood on the roof of a hotel in Hendaye, France, and described the fighting going on just across the bay in Spain; his words and the rumbling of the big guns were clearly heard in this country.

They're building a new movie theater in New York, and equipping it for television, though we're told that television won't really be practical for some time to come.

Would you trade Warner Baxter for Dick Powell, or vice versa? Twentieth Century-Fox think it's a good deal. The former will get the latter for "On With the Dance," for which elaborate plans are being made. This is only the second time Powell has been allowed to stray from the home lot; the first time it was for "Thanks a Million." And in return Warner Brothers will use the very popular Mr. Baxter as co-star with Kay Francis. Warner Baxter still remembers the time when things weren't going too well for him, and as a result of playing the role of a theatrical producer in "Forty-second Street" for Warner Brothers his star rose again.

Funny, isn't it, the way a star's popularity ebbs for a while and then, if he's lucky, the tide turns and he becomes a box-office name once more. There's the case of George Bancroft, who was at the top for so long. Then, apparently, he slipped. If you saw "Mr. Deeds Comes to Town" you'll recall him in a small part which he played superbly. As a result of that Columbia will star him again, this time in "Racketeer in Exile."

When you see "Swing Time" you'll see Victor Moore, once one of the best comedians on the stage. In fact, that's what he was till he worked in "Swing Time." For some years he has had Broadway in the palm of his hand. And he was content to have it that way; had no yearnings for Hollywood. Years ago he made pictures — about fifteen years ago, to be exact. About forty short comedies and several feature length pictures were chalked up to his credit, before he declared that he'd never make another movie unless something revolutionary came along. Apparently the Rogers-Astaire picture was that something, for he has signed a long-term contract with RKO.

Helen Hayes has chosen the story for her series of broadcasts. It is "Bambi," a novel by Marjorie Benton Cooke, which tells of the adventures of a small-town girl who comes to New York to go on the stage. It was published about twenty years ago—if you can remember that far back you may recall it.

Rudy Vallee will go to work in Hollywood again in October—the picture being entitled "Mr. Melody." And gossipy folk are renewing the talk about a romance between him and Alice Faye.

In "Sing, Baby, Sing" Adolphe Menjou gives one of the best performances of his career. Alice Faye, the heroine of the picture, has improved greatly. The story is obviously based on the romance of Elaine Barrie and John Barrymore—there's the pursuit across the country and all the rest of it; no wonder John objected!

If you want to get in touch with Kate Smith, who'll be back on the air waves soon, write to Kated, Incorporated; the address is 1819 Broadway, New York city. That's her business name, and she employs no less than 55 persons. Some attend to charities, some to the professional basketball team which she owns, three give their time to her fan mail, others look after her radio and theatrical affairs and there's a special department devoted to helping young artists.

ODDS AND ENDS . . . Joe E. Brown, back from his London triumphs, will make a picture that Douglas Fairbanks made years ago, "Flirting With Fate" . . . Harry Horlick, of the air waves, has a collection of autographs which includes those of many of the Russian nobility who perished in the revolution . . . Phil Baker's favorite broadcasts are private ones; he loves to talk about his two-year-old son . . . "The Gorgeous Hussy" is a grand picture, with Joan Crawford doing fine work, but it certainly mangles the historical facts on which it's supposed to be based . . . Paramount's "The General Died at Dawn" is one of the most thrilling of current pictures . . . And you certainly don't want to miss "The Texas Rangers."

Charming Autumn Frock

Introducing Autumn's smartest frock. Snug at the waistline and flared below, a youthful interpretation with snap and dash. It's grand for business, school, socials, and a winning number at bunco or bingo!

The blouse has a clever feminine touch in its soft gathers that peep cunningly from beneath the yoke, which is topped by a narrow standing collar that ties in a dainty knot. To please your whim, omit the necktie and substitute a neckerchief, or ascot tie; then again forget about the buttons, open the yoke, press down the sides forming a V and trim it with a bright bouttonaire. You may have your way about the sleeves, too, for the pattern offers both, long and short. A graduated gore reduces the sweep at the hipline and gives the much desired flare to the hem.

Barbara Bell Pattern No. 1949-B is available in sizes 12, 14; 16, 18 and 20. Corresponding bust measurements 30, 32, 34, 36 and 38 Size 14 (32) requires four and three-eighths yards of 39-inch material, four and one-fourth yards with short sleeves. Price of Pattern, 15 cents.

Duce Greets Mothers and Their Children

Fecundity being the most desirble feminine virtue, in the eyes of emier Mussolini, these Italian others at Potenza brought their pspring with them when they gathred to meet Il Duce. Premier ussolini is here shown chatting ith a group of mothers, during s visit to Potenza.

For several years, Mussolini and his Fascist government have urged the rearing of large families. Various government funds have been appropriated to give financial aid to families with several children, and the result has been a gradual increase in Italy's birthrate.

Germany under the Hitler government has also used similar schemes to check the declining birth rate and to increase the population. The war and the recent financial distress in European countries has caused a falling off in the population figures, and looking to the future, the militaristic governments have used every means to increase the population.

EXCHANGE SOYBEANS FOR OILMEAL FOR HOG FEED

Hog raisers desirous of utilizing home-grown or available commercial supplies of soybeans should either keep the proportion of beans fed to fattening hogs down to 6 per cent of the ration or substitute soybean oilmeal for the soybeans

While soybeans are a high protein feed they are not a satisfactory substitute for corn, and when fed to hogs, particularly on dry lot produce the so-called "soft pork", which is discriminated against by hog buyers If soybeans are used in the hog ration at all it is advisable to feed them at the end, rather than at the start of the feeding period

When the proportion of soybeans in the ration is kept down to 6 percent for fattening hogs at least 150 pounds in weight, soft pork to any appreciable extent is generally avoided

Soybeans may be exchanged for soybean oilmeal which does not produce soft pork as the oil of the beans has been removed. Soybean oilmeal has a higher protein content than soybeans and may generally be obtained at soybean milling plants by exchanging an equal amount of soybeans for meal This ratio of exchange was common last year

A feeding ration which consists chiefly of corn and soybeans will require supplements such as tankage or milk and minerals

Tax Promises and Tax Facts

Roosevelt Assurances as to 1937 Recall Other Pledges.

"No new taxes in 1937!"

Newspaper correspondents flashed that bulletin out of the White House on the morning of August 12. Mr. Roosevelt had held an early morning conference with three of his tax experts.

Leaders of the New Deal party were jubilant. They regarded as providential such an announcement at a point in the national campaign when the voters were expressing alarm about the tax burden.

But there was a fly in the syrup. The newspaper correspondents were only mildly impressed. Some of them even confessed that they detected a familiar ring in the announcement. They recalled that the same thing had been said early in 1935 and again early in 1936 Tax-relief had been promised by candidate Roosevelt even as far back as 1932. Yet, as a matter of fact, the annual tax burden has been increased 2,000 millions of dollars under the New Deal, with tax rates that have been boosted to the highest point in the country's history. The Government will collect upwards of 6,000 millions from taxpayers in the fiscal year 1937 It will spend an estimated 9,308 millions. Without new or additional taxes the Administration will have to borrow more than 3,000 millions.

The First Promise.

Mr. Roosevelt made a pledge to reduce taxes in his campaign speech at Sioux City, Iowa, on September 29, 1932. He said:

"I shall use this position of high responsibility (the Presidency) to discuss up and down the country in all seasons, at all times, the duty of reducing taxes, of increasing the efficiency of Government, of cutting out the underbrush around our government structure, of getting the most public service for every dollar paid by taxation. This I pledge you, and nothing I have said in the campaign transcends in importance this covenant with the taxpayers of this country."

The special session of Congress called by President Roosevelt after his inauguration approved important new tax measures. These were signed by Mr. Roosevelt. The new laws levied taxes on non-intoxicating liquors, processing taxes under AAA (much of which were paid by consumers), a capital stock tax, excess profits tax, tax on dividends and taxes included in NRA. Other temporary taxes were extended and certain tax regulations were stiffened

It was announced at the White House on March 30, 1934 that Congress would not be asked to increase taxes to finance veterans' legislation enacted over the President's veto.

The Revenue Act of 1934, however, made important changes in the Federal tax system. Surtaxes were made applicable to a lower level of income. Extensive changes were made in taxes affecting corporations. Estate and gift taxes were increased. The rate on distilled liquors was raised. In addition miscellaneous taxes included a new capital stock tax and revision of the excess profits tax.

What Happened in 1935.

In his message to Congress on January 8, 1935 Mr. Roosevelt said he did "not consider it advisable at this time to propose any new or additional taxes."

Five months later he sen another message to Congress in which he made "a number of suggestions of important changes in our policy of taxation." The Revenue Act of 1935 was the result. Increases were made in taxes on large individual and corporation incomes, excess profits, capital stock and estates.

In his budget message to Congress on January 3, 1936 Mr. Roosevelt said:

"The state of national recovery is such that receipts from prevailing tax sources on the basis of the present rates appear adequate for financing the ordinary operations of the Government in 1937 including service on the public debt; and no new or additional taxes are proposed."

Twenty-six days later Mr. Roosevelt announced that bonus legislation and the AAA decision had made it necessary to provide new revenues On March 3, 1936 he asked for $120,000,000 for the first year's amortization of obligations under the bonus act and $500,000,000 to finance his new farm program. The public had been forewarned of these new burdens but the people were not prepared for a revolutionizing of the tax system Congress passed the Roosevelt act taxing the savings of corporations, big and little. This was widely criticized as another attack on business.

The Administration now says: "No new taxes for 1937". Time will tell. As a matter of fact there has been an upward revision of taxes in each of the last four years.

Again the question arises, "Why not cut expenditures?" Heavy as the New Deal tax burden has become it lags far behind New Deal spending.

Either there will be new or additional taxes in 1937 or there will be more borrowing on a huge scale.

Landon Pledges Farm Security

Wants Economy of Plenty, Not Scarcity; Promises Drouth Aid.

DES MOINES, Iowa.—"I believe the American farmer should be a lord on his own farm," Gov. Alf M. Landon of Kansas told a capacity crowd at the State Fair grounds here, in a speech that was a complete assertion of his belief in the economics of plenty, as opposed to the Roosevelt administration's economics of scarcity.

Gov. Landon's solution of what he termed a "national problem" and not simply a "farm problem" was founded directly upon the Republican party's platform. He pledged himself to support of the family type farm and to cash benefit payments limited to the production level of such a farm, to give agriculture an equal footing with industries protected by the tariff. He promised to take care of farmers hit by drouth.

He committed himself to the fulfillment of all contracts made with farmers by the present administration. He promised to call upon the statesmen of both parties to work with agricultural leaders in the preparation of new legislation, if he is elected. And going beyond the bounds of the platform, he advocated the fullest possible development of crop insurance.

Pledges Benefit Payments.

"All the farmer asks," said Gov. Landon, "is that his income be on a parity with the rest of the nation, that he may enjoy the same standard of life, that his home be made secure, and that he be able to build up a reserve for the future.

"I know that these aims cannot be realized overnight. Miracles are no more common in Washington than they are in Des Moines. To get a real solution we must have a well-rounded program.

"If I am elected," Gov. Landon continued, "I shall fulfill all outstanding obligations made by the present administration with the American farmer. By this I mean that those who have carried out their end of the bargain will receive the checks due them.

"Those of our farmers hard hit by the drouth will be generously provided for until they can raise a crop. This means the continuation of relief checks!"

Would Offset Foreign Competition.

Farmers producing a normally exportable surplus of such staple products as hogs, wheat, cotton and tobacco are handicapped by tariff protections which are effective only when there is a shortage, Gov. Landon said.

"The Republican party," declared Gov. Landon, "proposes to offset these disadvantages by the payment of cash benefits. These cash benefits will be limited to the production level of the family type farm.

"As part of the plan for removing the depression effect of surpluses I shall propose an amendment to the federal warehousing act so that reserves of feed, such as corn, can be carried on the farm.

"Under this amendment the farmer who stores his grain on the farm, in such a way as to make it insurable, will be entitled to a federal warehouse receipt. He will then be eligible to borrow from any banking agency. He will enjoy the same credit facilities as are available to the owners of grain stored in terminal markets. The grain would be stored on the farm, ready for use or sale at any time the farmer cares to take up the loan."

Suggests Crop Insurance.

Gov. Landon then took up the matter of crop insurance, upon which Kansas Republican farm leaders have been working for some time. "We realize that there are difficulties," he said. "But insurance companies are writing policies today covering risks that they did not consider feasible a few years ago."

Here Gov. Landon declared that he could not agree with a policy like that of the AAA, which attempts permanent control of American agriculture from Washington. "I cannot agree with the President," he said. "I believe the American farmer should be 'a lord on his own farm'."

He charged that the administration, after four years, was still without a workable plan for agriculture. "It's right back where it started from!" he said. "Soil conservation—real conservation—is a subject close to my heart."

Gov. Landon reminded his listeners that two years ago he had suggested to the Roosevelt administration a comprehensive program of joint federal and state action, but that it had not been adopted.

Gov. Landon said the country's 35 billion dollar debt under President Roosevelt "can be paid only by taxation if this is to remain an honest government. Taxes add to the cost of everything and the farmer is so situated that he cannot escape their penalty. Further, the taxes reduce the ability of the consumer to buy the products of the farm. The Republican party proposes to put an end to the present waste and extravagance."

New Deal Seeks Greater Powers

Administration Effort to Centralize Authority Analyzed.

There are three distinct phases of the New Deal effort to set up a centralized government at Washington as a substitute for the traditional system provided by the Constitution First there is the effort to encroach upon fields heretofore reserved to the states and thus gradually take over the functions of local self-government. Second there is the effort to regiment and control the activities of individuals and businesses under the guidance of Federal bureaucrats Third there is the attempt to consolidate Federal power in the hands of the executive branch of the Government at the expense of Congress.

All three of these tendencies are exemplified in many New Deal laws, a considerable part of which have been held unconstitutional by the Courts. The manifestations of the third phase of this movement have been listed and analyzed in a pamphlet issued recently by the American Liberty League. The League drew a fourteen count indictment of this feature of the New Deal as follows

1. Legislative power far beyond any in the past has been delegated to the executive branch of the Government in more than a dozen important laws, virtually all of which, except as nullified by the Supreme Court, remain in effect

2. Control of industry, agriculture and the monetary system have been attempted by executive agencies along lines uncharted by statute

3 Delegation of legislative power to the Executive has even invaded fields reserved to the States under the Constitution

4. The Supreme Court has been emphatic in condemnation of the unrestricted delegation of legislative power in such instances as have reached a final adjudication

5. More than 1,500 Executive orders with the force of law have been issued by the President.

6. As many as 50 new agencies and bureaus have been created by Executive order to meet emergency conditions, and more than half of them are still in active operation although New Deal spokesmen declare the emergency has passed

7. Legislative and judicial powers as well have been delegated to regulatory agencies created or strengthened by laws enacted on the recommendation of the administration.

8. A huge new payroll, largely exempt from civil service and including many important officials for whom no Senate confirmation is required, has been established by executive authority

9. Enormous sums, greater than twice the entire annual cost of the Government before the depression, have been available to the President to spend at will for public works and work relief

10 New projects of an unprecedented character, visionary and impractical, have been entered upon by the Executive without submission to Congress

11. Shocking wastes of public money have taken place, notably in the Passamaquoddy and Florida Ship Canal projects initiated by the President and finally stopped by Congress.

12 Political considerations have figured in allotments for relief and public works and in the distribution of jobs

13 Thousands of administrative orders, with the same force of law as Executive orders, have been issued by officials to whom the President has redelegated power.

14. Executive power has been used for experimentation with theories neither sanctioned by Congress nor approved by authorities most competent to pass judgment.

One of the conclusions reached by the League was:

"Obliteration of the constitutional dividing lines between coordinate branches lays the foundation for a potential dictatorship."

Shelterbelt Abandoned; Dream Cost $2,500,000

Another spectacular New Deal experiment was tossed into the discard when it was decided to abandon the Roosevelt idea of a shelterbelt of trees reaching from Canada to Texas The $75,000,000 project was announced in July, 1934, and $2,500,000 had been spent on it up to June, 1936. Congress refused even to appropriate $1,000,000 more in the agricultural bill to carry on a study of the scheme.

The object of the shelterbelt idea was to conserve the soil and soil moisture and to protect homesteads and crops from dry summers and cold winters. It had been proposed to make the belt 1,000 miles long and 100 miles wide. The belt was to have traversed North and South Dakota, Nebraska, Kansas, Oklahoma and into northern Texas.

What Youth Will Get.

The New Deal makes an appeal to youth to go along with the spending program and promises that youth will thereby inherit the earth It is more likely that youth will merely assume the mortgage.

More Bad News in New Budget

President's Figures Are Startling; Hidden Taxes Rise.

The Roosevelt Administration will have collected more than sixteen billions of dollars from the taxpayers by the end of the present fiscal year, June 30, 1937. It will have spent all of that huge sum since June 30 1933 and almost fifteen billions in addition The fifteen billions will have been obtained largely by signing the taxpayer's name to promissory notes, which will have to be paid by the taxpayer's children, and children's children.

The plight of the taxpayers is made no less serious by the fact that more than one half of his Federal taxes have been hidden. Income taxes are direct and visible. The hidden tax, however, is one that has been imposed on manufacturers, merchants, etc , and is passed on to consumers by adding the amount of the tax to the price of the goods sold to the public.

Familiar samples of such taxation are the 2-cent tax on a loaf of bread, the 6-cent tax on each package of cigarettes and the total of 40 cents —taking the average of Federal, State and local taxes—that the car-owner pays every time he buys a dollar's worth of gasoline.

Hidden Taxes Increase.

This list might be extended to hundreds of items on which the buyer pays the invisible tax. The payments are small, but they are continuous and the aggregate amounts so collected are enormous. In the fiscal year 1936 the miscellaneous internal revenue taxes, most of which are of the invisible kind, amounted to a total of slightly more than two billions of dollars. In the fiscal year 1937 the total will be two billions and two hundred and thirty millions of dollars In the last fiscal year 60 cents of the tax dollar came from hidden taxes and only 40 cents from income taxes.

Writers on national tax matters point to these facts to show how foolish it is to accept the often-heard statement that "soak-the-rich" tax measures take the greater part of the tax load off the backs of people of moderate or small means. They may earn so little that they are not required to pay any income tax. But every man and woman who buys food, clothing, medicines, furniture, automobiles or any of the necessities or conveniences of life pays the hidden tax.

President's Figures Startling.

Mr Roosevelt on September 1 issued a statement on the budget for the present fiscal year. While accountants have found the President's figures puzzling and New Deal critics have charged that the revised budget was given out as a "campaign document" everybody apparently has been startled at the huge totals The revised estimate for the current fiscal year makes it possible to review the totals of the four years of spending under the Roosevelt Administration.

The President estimated the gross deficit for the present year at slightly more than two billions of dollars. He indicated, however, that there would be a request for another appropriation of $500,000,000 for work-relief and drought-relief. This will bring the deficit to more than two and one-half billions

Can't Blame Bonus.

Including the additional $500,000,000 the totals for four years of New Deal taxing, spending and borrowing are as follows: receipts, more than sixteen billions; expenditures, more than thirty-one and one-half billions; deficits, almost fifteen billions. The huge amount estimated for this fiscal year's spending cannot be attributed to the bonus payments, for the reason that all but $560,000,000 of the bonus obligations were paid off in the last previous fiscal year

Figures for 1936 and 1937 show that if the bonus payments were eliminated entirely the total spent would still be well over seven billion dollars in each year.

The President's September statement also disclosed that increasing costs of government are not all due to relief expenditures. The startling fact is that while certain regular departments of the government, which have no relation to recovery and relief, cost the taxpayers only $529,501,937 in 1935, the expenditures in the same departments for the fiscal year 1937 will be $991,735,300. Regular or ordinary expenditures for the civil departments and agencies and the judiciary thus have almost doubled in two years.

Taxpayers who have been waiting for economy in government apparently will have to wait some more.

Socialism in Utilities Unfair to Taxpayer

President Roosevelt said in a recent speech in Washington that the huge power and electric enterprises of the Government would not injure private power and electric companies, with which the Government was in competition. The private enterprises deny this. Taxpayers in all parts of the country also have an interest in the matter, as they are compelled to support the Government's power programs so that consumers in favored areas may enjoy reduced rates.

Golden Johannesburg

Pyramids of Dross at Johannesburg.

Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.

THE Golden Jubilee of Johannesburg, Union of South Africa, is marked by the opening of the Empire Exhibition of South Africa. Two million visitors are expected as a minimum during the four months' duration of this, the first exhibition outside the British Isles purporting to reflect activities of the entire British Empire, which embraces about one-fourth of the entire earth's land area.

The Jubilee for Johannesburg is "golden" in more ways than one. In claiming a place among the world's most prosperous, this city needs only to mention that it is the center for the ten-billion-dollar gold industry of the Witwatersrand, discovered in 1886

Thus Johannesburg is the city that gold built. Just fifty years ago George Walker, out for a stroll, accidentally stubbed his toe and kicked into a gold-bearing outcrop of what proved to be the main reef of the Witwatersrand. Here, shaped like a vast bowl imbedded face-upward, was a 70-mile stretch of gold-impregnated rock, now familiarly known as the Rand and surely one of the richest gold fields in the world.

Immediately, upon that treeless uninhabited no-man's-land there appeared a tawdry mining village of tents and covered wagons. Telegraph wires hummed and the village became a raw tin-shack town of 3,000 people.

The prevailing crude process of mining and treatment of ore lost half the gold worked. Yet who cared, since the Reef seemed inexhaustible? Supplies were teamed from 300 miles away. Yet who minded fancy prices? And, as to the water shortage, "All right; let's bring in champagne!"

Thus began the babyhood of Johannesburg, which is to-day, though a mere youth of fifty years, a giant in achievement. The largest African town south of Cairo and chief commercial plexus of the South African Union's hinterland, "Jo'burg" has a municipal area of nearly 82 square miles and some 300,000 people, or about half the population of the Reef, upon which rises this city built on gold.

Now a Cosmopolitan City

A town of such spectacular beginnings needs time to settle down to life's quieter realities. Today, 50 years young and quite used to having an annual $225,000,000 worth of gold dug up, so to speak, in its back yard, the City of the Reef presents the aspects of a well-rounded cosmopolitanism

One might expect such fine public buildings as the Town Hall, the Law Courts, and the Stock Exchange. Few visitors, however, would anticipate the planned beauty of some of Johannesburg's suburbs, or the spaciousness of its parks and recreation fields, or its support of art, medical research, and of so impressive an academic seat as the Witwatersrand University.

It is reported that growth even within the past few years has accelerated, to keep time with the amazing boom in the value of gold. Tall buildings are taller and more frequent on the skyline of this South African metropolis—and still going up!

As for the city's play-hour aspects, one might mention innumerable clubs, race meets, sporting events, motor cars like peas in a pod, and as for motorcycles—watch your step! In off hours the City Built on Gold forgets its world-important mining interests in such relaxations as a quiet game of bowls on swards as smooth as golf greens. For Johannesburgers are one with Drake in their love of bowling greens and the very same game which tradition says the great Elizabethan was playing with the captains of his fleet when couriers brought news of the sighting of the Armada.

Mines of the Rand

Strangely impressive, as one approaches Johannesburg, are these miles upon miles of mine dumps surrounding the Witwatersrand gold fields and stretching across the vast plain like avenues of mammoth monuments. Indeed, South Africa also has its pyramids—pyramids of waste material, running into millions of tons of fine white sands, left from the gold-extracting processes. Their sloping sand-hued massifs suggest military fortifications on a scale the world has never known.

The Witwatersrand mines present a unique sight. Above ground is a confusing mass of vats, trolleys, bins, trestles supporting pipes and machinery, dumps, headgears topped by cables and whirling wheels, and various structures of wood and iron. Workmen, who are "undergound commuters," descend by "skip" (lift) into the interior at the speed of an express elevator for well over a mile into the depths of the earth.

Johannesburgers dig holes as grandiosely as Americans rear skyscrapers — more grandiosely. The shafts of the deepest mine on the Rand at present descend over 8,000 feet, approximately a mile and a half. Plans are under way for mining to the depth of 10,000 feet, nearly two miles.

A trip below the surface reveals to you a subteranean electric-lit town, with avenues and cross streets, where thousands of men are drilling and loading the gold-bearing conglomerate. It gives you the impression of cleanliness, neatness, and—thanks to the giant elevators — of a not-too-uncomfortable warmth.

You stay long enough to watch a surface hoist start off with a load weighing over nine tons which it will lift up that mile or more of shaft to the crushing and reduction plant in about two minutes. Then you too may ascend once more to what, measuring shafts by skyscrapers, the elevator operator might conceivably announce as "Two hundredth floor, last stop!"

What you have glimpsed is but a tiny corner of what is, in effect, a vast underground city, whose axis measures 70 miles, whose workers number over 300,000 and whose shafts, avenues, and streets exceed 4,000 miles, or approximately the length of the African continent.

Sports of the Natives

How to handle that grand total of 212,000 men, 90 per cent of them Bantu, who, either above ground or under it, work on the Rand?

Recreation—whether golf, tennis, bowls, swimming, or native dances —is universal, with inter-mine sport as a corollary. As to health and safety, each man regularly undergoes medical examination, first aid is taught to many thousands, while that cheery organ, The Reef, advises you on everything, from keeping fit to giving accident-prevention tips to American visitors in what is thought to be Americanese.

As to native recreation, the "boys" weekly war dance rivals a circus, a rodeo, and a football match combined. Here is a native compound disgorging its thousands of black Shangaans who are welcoming other thousands of black M'Chopis, the former tribe's invited guests. A pell-mell pageant of savage magnificence! All are superb in leopard skins, beads, head plumes, oxtail knee adornments.

Iron and Diamonds, Too

How explain the Reef? How was this treasure house built? In order to comprehend, we must imagine successive geologic cataclysms — molten rock being ejected from the interior of the earth; long-vanished seas rushing in to lay sediments thereon; then the sea's retirement, and in its place some great, prehistoric river sweeping through auriferous regions to deposit its granular gold among that three-mile depth of marine sediment.

But the Transvaal, like South Africa in general, is as varied in respect to treasure houses as was ancient Delphi, with its "treasuries." In the Pretoria region, and also near Rustenburg and in the "Bushveld Complex," there are apparently unlimited iron resources, while the last-named region promises to yield one of the greatest platinum deposits in the world.

And then there are the ever-cropping-up diamonds—one might almost say, those irrepressible South African diamonds. Really, one never knows where they will turn up next.

And, just to illustrate how South African diamonds keep cropping up, here is a glimpse of the Lichtenburg alluvial diggings west of Johannesburg. Not ten years ago Lichtenburg was a tiny, willow-shaded Sleepy Hollow of a dorp—sleepy, perhaps dreaming, but certainly not of diamonds. But suddenly one day appeared some 25,000 men, who lined up for the official pistol shot, then rushed pell-mell to peg their claims on what had proved to be a diamond field fifteen miles long by five miles wide.

For the Pacific States
A Good Example
It Sold for $700

The Pacific states should interest themselves in air defense, apart from the national government.

Arthur Brisbane

When a committee of rich men from New York called on Abraham Lincoln, told him how much money they had, and urged that he send a good battleship to do nothing but protect New York city, his reply was that if he had as much money as they said they had, he would build a battleship for himself.

The west coast states, California, Oregon, Washington, co-operating perhaps with their vigorous neighbors of Vancouver, and other points above the Canadian border, might well have a few flying ships of their own, a sort of air militia.

San Francisco, where they combine patriotism with plenty of money, and great civic pride and energy, might well start the idea of a Pacific coast flying force. That need not be very expensive. A hundred machines to begin with, a hundred plucky young fliers, practicing the gentle art of flying at night, and dropping bombs, practicing especially mimic warfare against other flying machines, would constitute an admirable object lesson to the rest of the country.

And if California, in San Francisco for instance, should start a little flock of one hundred machines, Los Angeles could be relied upon to hurry in with two hundred, Seattle and other coast cities also.

Such machines need not be a total loss.

In the first place, many young gentlemen with rich fathers, not knowing exactly what to do with themselves, extremely anxious to find work worth while, and preferably dangerous, would delight in each equipping his individual machine, for the service of the Pacific coast and of Uncle Sam, as the nobles in the old days delighted in equipping each his regiment, or his fighting ship, for the service of the king.

Two hundred or three hundred high - powered, swift flying machines, directed by quick and courageous American brains, would be worth more to the safety of the Pacific coast than a hundred battleships. For the fighters that come, if they do come, will fly miles above the battleships.

They would come less gaily, less confidently, if they knew that trained fliers awaited them.

Hideyo Noguchi, who gave his life to fight yellow fever in Africa, will inspire many men. He was born of a proud, warlike race, intensely self-centered, for 2,000 years a hermit people. The loyalty of a Japanese was to family, clan, above all to the emperor representing his race. The rest of the world was nothing to him.

Born one generation after Japan opened her doors to the world, Noguchi felt the new spirit of the times. He was loyal to family, clan, emperor, race; but he was devoted chiefly to all human kind.

From boyhood to the last, through poverty and many perils, he studied how to wipe out disease. He discovered the germ of yellow fever, developed serums to prevent the fever or cure it, led in the work that has driven it out of America and will soon put an end to it throughout the world

Yellow fever killed countless millions of all peoples. Noguchi's skill and devotion have saved the lives of millions, too many to estimate, most of them foreigners to whom his forefathers would have paid no attention, calling them hei-min, or no-folks.

Noguchi's self-sacrifice to human welfare sets an example that is sure to be followed. Perhaps, in time, most men will see that it is better to help one another than to kill or even rob one another.

It is said the Hackensack Indians sold to the white men for so many bars of lead, and some finery, worth altogether $700, land on which now stands the entire city of Newark, N. J., and a great deal of land beyond.

The poor Hackensack chief, with his $700, couldn't buy today enough land for a tight grave at the corner of Broad and Market streets in Newark. Land goes up wonderfully.

Doctors at Kansas City report that birth control information so much discussed does little good to the poor, and has caused an "alarming slump in child bearing among educated families."

That is how reform works, usually. But since 90 per cent of human beings worth while come from poor families, providence may be working in its usual mysterious way

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted
By WILLIAM BRUCKART
NATIONAL PRESS BLDG. WASHINGTON, D. C.

Washington.—It has been exceedingly interesting to watch the progress of the Democratic and Republican campaign committees in their efforts to shape and join the issues upon which the electorate will choose the next occupant of the White House. There has been a tremendous amount of hauling and filling, each side coming forth with trial balloons in an effort to find out what it is that will attract the most interest among the voters and to determine what particular matters afford the best vehicle on which they can ride into office.

Campaign Issues

From the beginning of this year, President Roosevelt has been trying to shape his issue on the basis of a single question—whether the American people in dollars and cents are better off then they were when he took office. I think admittedly that if Mr. Roosevelt could force that question into the center of the stage and make it the real issue, he would have very little campaigning to do. But the trouble is Mr. Roosevelt has been unable to accomplish his purpose and no little credit for his threat to force a joinder of issues on this point is due to the Republican leadership. The Republican managers simply will not be led into that trap. Thus, we must look elsewhere to see what the real issues are, or are likely to be, in this campaign decision.

It has nearly always been true that the issues prominent early in the campaign have proved not to be the issues at all near the end of a political battle. This year promises to be no exception. Political leaders attempt to figure out the proposition upon which their opponents are most vulnerable and obviously this figuring takes place in advance. It has to happen that way in order that methods of attack can be arranged in advance.

The New Dealers thought they could smoke out the Republicans by shouting far and wide that the people as a whole are better off than they were when Mr. Roosevelt took office. But, again, it was a case where political strategy did not work. Even though many hundred thousands of people are better off, the fact remains that there are some twenty million persons receiving relief in one form or another and the further fact remains that there are somewhere between nine million and ten million workers without jobs. Consequently, Mr. Roosevelt's question whether people were better off in dollars and cents did not quite click.

In the meantime, the Republicans have found what they believe to be a very vulnerable spot in the New Deal armor and they are shooting at it with machine-gun rapidity. This question, this spot, centers around taxation. The Republicans apparently thought at the start of the fight that Democratic waste of federal money and the vast debt that was piled up would force a revulsion of feeling against New Deal policies. So they started out on that campaign horse. But they found that the question of taxation over-shadowed the other, even though the taxation about which the Republicans are talking has been an offspring of the alleged waste of the party in power.

I doubt that the taxation issue would have been as important as it is proving to be had not the New Dealers made a mistake in political strategy. This mistake, it may be said in passing, illustrates how very minor things influence the ultimate result in politics to a greater extent perhaps than in any other activity of American national life. The mistake which I refer to was made by Attorney General Cummings.

Err in Strategy

The story of the circumstance chronologically is something like this: The Republicans from their headquarters in Chicago began calling attention to increased tax burdens in connection with their exposure of the increase of more than thirteen billion dollars in the country's debt. They pointed out how, if the Roosevelt administration had not wasted money, preparations would not have to be made for raising the taxes and how, if this waste had not occurred, tax increases which we already have had would not have taken place.

As a part of the demonstration of increased taxation the Republicans issued campaign literature itemizing the amount of taxes each and every one of us pays on the common every-day necessities of life. They showed how each loaf of bread, each pair of shoes, each pork-chop, among other things, bears so much tax which all of us pay in buying those necessities of life.

Probably the distribution of this campaign literature by the Republicans would not have stirred up so much fuss in and of itself had it not been for the action of Attorney General Cummings. The Attorney General made some public threats that he would seek to indict those who were responsible for distribution of this information, claiming that a federal law had been violated. Being attorney general of the United States, any statement from him got wide distribution.

But the Republicans, recognizing the potentialities of this situation, issued a challenge to Mr. Cummings to proceed with his threat of indictments. Their publicity statement on the point was just as virulent as that of any red-blooded American boy who says to his playmate, "I dare you to!"

Well, the rejoinder of the Republicans rather put Mr. Cummings on the spot.

I presume probably the threat and the resulting challenge still would have amounted to nothing except that the method employed by the Republicans capitalized on that threat by accusing the attorney general of seeking to prevent free speech and to prohibit discussion of campaign issues. If there is one thing that the American people resent, it is any attempt by a governmental agency of whatever character it may be that seeks to stifle discussion. They look upon it as a sign of dictatorship. Somewhere in their veins still courses the virus that overthrew King George in the birth of this nation.

That is why the Cummings threat is so important.

President Roosevelt announced the other day that he is preparing to start reorganization of the federal administrative agencies. He said he had arrived at the conclusion that such a course was necessary because there has been overlapping in function and jurisdiction among the many agencies created by the New Deal. It is the second time that the President has proposed reorganization of the governmental units and his new announcement promises to attract as much attention as did his original announcement which was made when he was a candidate during the 1932 presidential campaign.

Too Many Agencies

For a long time, it has been plainly evident to observers in Washington that New Deal agencies were literally falling over one another and that many of them were constantly in conflict with others because the laws or executive orders, chiefly the executive orders, by which these agencies were created, did not clarify their jurisdiction or their function.

A good deal of this trouble obviously had its origin in the haste that characterized the early efforts of the Roosevelt administration to establish machinery by which problems of the depression could be solved or alleviated. It always happens that when governmental agencies are created in such haste, ridiculous situations result. It was the case during the World war and it has been the case during the New Deal's efforts to solve depression problems under the emergency powers granted by congress. The truth seems to be that there is more overlapping, more conflict, now than there was during the World war.

I have known of numerous instances where one agency, under authority given it by the President, has promulgated rules and regulations having the force of law that did not conform to rules and regulations dealing with the same matters but coming from another unit of government. In addition, I have seen different interpretations placed on the same statute or the same regulation by two different agencies. In consequence, the citizen whose business practices or personal affairs were touched by government edict found himself prohibited from doing a particular thing on the one hand and ordered to do it on the other.

Much Confusion

Thus, it would seem that it is high time for something to be done about re-organization. It would seem equally to be high time for elimination of some of the extra red tape of government which has been wound about the private lives of American citizens by the New Deal. Goodness knows, there was plenty of red tape before the New Deal ;it certainly is worse now than it was before.

The thing that seemed to interest most of the writing fraternity in Washington, however, was not so much the alleviation of the conditions which I have mentioned, but the political aspects of the presidential announcement that new reorganization plans were under consideration. Some of these writers who are critical of the New Deal went back to the 1932 campaign records and dragged out to public view Mr. Roosevelt's promises respecting governmental complexities.

Bartholdi's Inspiration.

rtholdi served valiantly for visit the United States. As the mship Compagnie Transat-ique entered New York haron June 21, 1871, and his gaze, eping the inspiring panorama

re him, alighted on Bedloe's nd he at once visualized upon great statue of Liberty. He quickly made a sketch of the proposed statue and during his stay in this country talked enthusiastically of his plan. He met President Grant, Generals Meade and Sheridan and the poet, Longfellow, during his stay in this country and found them sympathetic toward the project.

Upon his return to France he showed his friends the sketch he had made on board ship—a giant figure of a woman which he called "Liberty Enlightening the World." Soon the French were organizing committees to raise money to pay for such a magnificent gift to America and Bartholdi was commissioned to make the statue. The beginning of the campaign to raise the money was celebrated on November 6, 1875, by a huge banquet at the Hotel Louvre in Paris. Prominent figures in the world of arts, letters and politics were present, both from the United States and France. Among the celebrities there, also, was Gounod, composer of the famous opera, "Faust," who had written a special hymn in honor of the goddess, which, he announced, was to be sung at the opera's premiere.

In the course of the banquet, Laboulaye, a typical Frenchman, climbed to the stage and cried: "See how much I lov. the Americans. Even at my great age I mount the platform for them."

As the project developed, an American committee was formed, with William M. Evarts, secretary of state, as chairman, to raise $300,000 for the foundations and pedestal. This added to the $700,000 being raised by popular subscription in France brought the cost to $1,000,000. In 1872 Congress had voted to accept the gift and in 1877 Bedloe's Island, previously used as the site of a fort, was set aside for the memorial.

Work on the memorial proceeded steadily, though far from as speedily as the ardent Bartholdi wished. His first small model stood nearly six feet high. Its dimensions were multiplied by twenty for the final colossal figure.

Shown at Expositions.

By opening of the Centennial exposition in 1876 at Philadelphia the project had gained great headway. At that world's fair was shown the right forearm of the image, with the torch, just as it was finally installed. Many who saw it there wondered if anything so huge could be ever lifted to the height proposed. After the exposition was over the arm was exhibited in Madison Square.

The head of the statue was exhibited at the Paris exposition of 1878. The following year the subscription lists were filled and on July 7, 1880, an official letter was addressed to the American committee in charge of the project on this side of the Atlantic, reporting on the progress of the work and the probable date of its completion.

Steadily the work went on and by October 19, 1881, the anniversary of the Battle of Yorktown, all pieces of the figure's framework and the base were in place in the work rooms in France, where it had been visited by more than 300,000 people. When the framework and base were put in place at the French capital, Levi P. Morton, American ambassador to France, drove the first rivet in it.

Late in 1883 the work in France was practically completed but the pedestal on Bedloe's island was only partly finished. So the figure was placed on exhibition in Paris where it towered over the housetops for months.

On June 11, 1884, Ambassador Morton gave a great dinner to the committee of the French-American Union, under whose direction the work had been done, and suggested that formal presentation be made on July 4. This was done and the presentation took place in Paris, with Ambassador Morton representing the United States, and Ferdinand de Lesseps, builder of the Suez Canal, the French.

A month later the corner stone of the pedestal was laid on Bedloe's Island and in June of the next year it was completed. The copper goddess sailed from Toulon aboard the French vessel Isere, her parts packed in 210 boxes. The Isere was convoyed across the Atlantic by a squadron of American warships, and in June, 1885, "Miss Liberty" landed on the shores of the New World.

The assembly of the statue began here in the spring of 1886 and when the statue was dedicated on October 28 of that year the principal address was delivered by President Grover Cleveland. According to contemporary accounts more than a million people witnessed the ceremonies The little island could not accommodate many of them but the New York shore line was a solid mass of humanity for miles

Needless to say, Bartholdi, accompanied by Mme. Bartholdi, and a French delegation headed by Ferdinand de Lesseps, were on hand for the ceremony

According to the program drawn up by Major General Schofield, commander of the eastern department of the United States army, the formalities included "military, naval and civil parades," speeches and invocations, patriotic songs and hymns, artillery salutes and illuminations. One can imagine Bartholdi's pride when he drew the cords of the huge tricolor and unveiled the statue in the presence of President Cleveland and his cabinet, the French delegation, members of both houses of congress, the nation's political and military leaders, massed troops and a vast throng of onlookers.

Eighth Wonder of World

When Count Ferdinand de Lesseps made the speech in Paris in 1884 presenting this statue to the American people he called it "the eighth wonder of the world" and it is indeed that. For "Miss Liberty" is two or three feet higher than the famous Colossus of Rhodes. Her height from the heel to the top of the torch in the raised arm is 151 feet. From the base of the foundation of the pedestal to the torch, the memorial stands 305.5 feet above sea level.

This female figure, shown in classic draperies, is 35 feet in diameter at the waist. The right arm which holds the beacon is 42 feet long and 12 feet across at its greatest thickness.

Inside its hollow metal shell is a ladder with fifty-two rungs by which visitors may climb into the circular gallery which makes the upper rim of the torch.

Within the head forty persons can stand at once, as the head is 17 feet high from chin to the tip of the cranium and proportionately wide. The hands are 16 feet long and the index fingers 8 feet. The tablet held by the left arm of the goddess is 23 feet long and 13 feet 7 inches wide and 2 feet thick. It has inscribed on it "July 4, 1776."

Let Us Take a Page From the Note Book of the Hotel Chef

Favorite Meat Dishes Which May Be Served in Home Meals.

Certain hotels and restaurants through years of service have gained for their foods a reputation which has traveled far and wide. These dishes, many of them, can become favorites at home, if we but take a page from the chef's note book.

Steaks and mixed grills—in fact, broiled dishes of any kind — are hotel favorites, say the chefs.

Choosing Tender Steaks.

The chef usually knows how to choose a tender steak. His best indication of tenderness is the amount of fat which it carries It should have a generous covering of fat over the outside and a marbling of fat throughout the lean The steak should be cut thick, at least one inch, and if it has been aged, so much the better Frequently, the hotel chef buys a whole loin of beef and allows it to hang in his refrigerated room for several days before he cuts it into steaks and in some markets this same practice of aging is followed before the steaks are cut

The best way to broil a steak is to thoroughly preheat the broiling oven with the regulator set to "high," and then place the steak on a rack far enough from the flame or heating elements that by the time it is nicely browned on one side it will be half done. When browned on one side, it is seasoned with salt and pepper, turned and allowed to brown and finish cooking on the second side. The steak should be served without a moment's delay after it is cooked. This, as much as any other factor, makes the steak served in a hotel so thoroughly enjoyed, because it is still sizzling hot and puffy with its own juices when the diner makes the first cut.

For a Delicious Mixed Grill.

The mixed grill means simply a whole meal cooked in the broiler. Usually this includes a lamb chop, perhaps little link sausages, sweetbreads, which have been parboiled in acidulated water and put under the broiler to become browned, and frequently ground meat patties wrapped with bacon. These are broiled in exactly the same way as the steak, except for the length of time needed in broiling. This depends on temperature and the thickness of the meat. Broiling, however, should be done at a moderately low temperature for the best results.

Pork chops, too, can be just as delicious as those baked and served at hotels if you but insist that they are cut thick and cooked slowly. Here is the way one hotel chef prepares them:

Baked Stuffed Pork Chops.

Pork chops cut thick
½ cup minced ham
½ cup minced mushrooms
1 cup bread crumbs
½ cup rice, uncooked
2 tablespoons minced onion
2 tablespoons minced green pepper
½ cup tomatoes

Brown the ham mushrooms, onions and green pepper, then add the uncooked rice and tomatoes, together with two cups meat stock Let cook until the rice is tender. Add the bread crumbs and season to taste Fill pocket in chops with this. Brown the chops on both sides, cover tightly and bake slowly for twenty-five or thirty minutes.

Arctic Goats

The supremacy of the Alaskan malemutes as the Arctic beast of burden is being challenged by the lowly billy goat. Late dispatches from Seward claim that several trappers and explorers are already using Swiss milch goats instead of dogs to pull their sleds.

It is claimed that the goats will not only outpull an equal number of dogs, but require much less feed—an important item in the Arctic. In addition, by taking a nanny goat along, the trapper or explorer is provided with about a quart of rich, wholesome milk daily.—Washington Post.

Hens Now Lay Two Eggs Where They Laid But One Before!

Mrs. John Lauen evidently has a flock of hens that have ideas of their own. Last week Mrs. Lauen gathered the eggs as usual and when she came to the house John noticed a large egg Upon opening the egg a perfectly formed egg was found inside the outer shell—two eggs instead of one.

We have heard Klemme feed dealers claim a lot for their poultry feed, and no doubt this flock has been fed on Klemme's high powered poultry feed.

Now, if Mrs. Lauen can convince the rest of the hens to double heir efforts well, figure it out! Make each hen lay two eggs, then light the chicken house at night and make them work 24 hours a day . . . one hen, four eggs; three days, one dozen!

ATTENTION, DUCK HUNTERS!

Hunters may use guns not larger than No 10 gauge Rifles may not be used The 100 foot regulation for blinds has been eliminated, but baiting and live decoys are not permitted to be used.

Daily bag limit on ducks is 10 for any one person and for coot (mudhen) 15 for one person.

The Federal duck stamp, which is on sale for $1 00 at most post offices, is required of all duck hunters over 16 years of age and is required in addition to the State license. It must be signed in ink across the face and must be in possession of he hunter while hunting Landowners or tenants hunting on their own land are not exempt from the duck stamp regulation.

Marriage Licenses Issued

Garner: — Marriage licenses issued to Arthur Holck, 24, and Lucille Hanson, both of Britt, and to James F. Sperry, legal, and Catherine Sperry, legal both of St. Paul, Minn.; Russell Haufman, 21, and Wardellen Carpenter, 19, both of Iowa Falls.

STATE CANNOT CHANGE DUCK HUNTING DATES

Since the announcement of the open season on migratory game birds by the Federal Government numerous complaints and petitions have been received by the State Conservation Commission. Many hunters are dissatisfied with the November 1st to November 30th open season for Iowa and want the dates changed and have appealed to the State to have the Federal regulations changed. The State Conservation Commission cannot change the Federal regulations to make them less sestrictive. It can make them more restrictive by reducing bag limits, seasons and other additional prohibitions, but it cannot change the dates of the open season.

Last year the season on migratory waterfowl opened on Ortober 21st and closed on November 19th A great number of complaints received at that time, some stating the season was too early and some stated that the season was too late. The 1936 season is only 10 days later than that of 1935. In 1935 many complained because the big flight did not occur until after the season closed.

The Klemme Auxiliary will meet Thursday evening, Oct. 8, at the home of Mrs. Verner Lewis. Members requested to bring dues.

Constitution Is Big Issue Of November 3rd Election

ERICAN SYSTEM OF GOVERNMENT AT STAKE

Experts on pre - election trends cognize that not for three generans has the Constitution been so minant in American thought as the 1936 campaign. Various issues ve been raised in the New Deal's fense of its four-year record but experts believe that many thouds will go to the polls particuly to vote on this one fundamenquestion:

Shall the American system of Govment be preserved?

In the press, on the radio and from blic rostrums warnings have been ued that constitutional self-govment may be at stake in the ction. It is predicted that great mbers of voters who are classed stay-at-homes will be eager to st a ballot this year on a matter universally important.

Appeal To Voters.

In advance of the primaries last ring the American Liberty ague issued a call to all voters to to the polls this year. The League a nation-wide organization whose sic purpose is to uphold and dend the Constitution. It issued a tter to its more than 100,000 mems to inaugurate a Get-Out-The-ote Campaign. The appeal was ade to adherents of all parties, gardless of how they proposed to ote. There was a favorable response om all sections of the country and is was emphasized by widespread pression of approval in the press.

Millions Don't Vote.

It was brought out in the League tter that 30,000,000 potential voters iled to take advantage of their ght to cast ballots in the presiental election of 1932. After citing e importance of the constitutional sue the letter said:

"In such circumstances every citizen owes a duty to himself, to his family and to his Nation. His duty is the free and intelligent exercise of his right of franchise—his vote. The ballot which a free citizen casts may be compared with the payment of a premium upon his insurance policy. If the premium is not paid, the policy lapses and he and his family lose the protection for which he has labored and saved for years. The exercise of your right to vote constitutes the premium you pay to protect the most valuable insurance policy every written — the Constitution of the United States."

Fifty-three per cent of the potential voters on the average remained away from the polls in the last four presidential elections. It is generally anticipated that this average will be considerably reduced on November 3.

What Happens to Savings in New Deal Pension Plan

The cruel deceit practiced by the Rooseveltian New Deal old age pension plan was exposed by Gov. Alf M. Landon in his address at Milwaukee. Calling the law "unjust and stupidly drafted," he pictured the tragedy of the New Deal in the following homily·

"Let me explain it in the simple terms of the family budget. The father of the family is a kindly man, so kindly that he borrows all he can to add to the family's pleasure. At the same time he impresses upon his sons and daughters the necessity of saving for their old age Every month they bring six per cent of their wages to him so that he may act as trustee and invest their savings for their old age.

"The father decides that the best investment is his own I. O. U. So every month he puts aside in a box his I. O. U. carefully executed, and, moreover, bearing interest at 3 per cent. And every month he spends the money that his children bring him, partly in meeting his regular expenses, and the rest in various experiments that fascinate him.

"Years pass — the children grow old—the day comes when they have to open their father's box. What do they find? Roll after roll of neatly executed 'I. O. U.'s'

"I am not exaggerating the folly of this legislation. The saving it forces on our workers is a cruel hoax.

"There is every probability that the cash they pay in will be used for current deficits and new extravagances."

Class Warfare Threat Is Seen

Taetics of New Deal Arouse Grave Fears.

Efforts to stimulate antagonism among various groups of citizens constitute a feature of the current political campaign which aroused considerable apprehension among those anxious to see constitutional democracy perpetuated in the United States.

The New Deal and Mr. Roosevelt personally appear to be responsible for this situation.

Although Mr. Roosevelt recently expressed the hope for "calm deliberation and clear thinking" in the present campaign, many of his utterances have been generally appraised as somewhat out of harmony with his expressed hope. An editorial in the Boston Transcript recently summed up this phase of the situation as follows:

"On several notable occasions Mr. Roosevelt himself has slipped away from the cool, calm and sweet reasonableness which now seem to him so desirable. Who else was it that branded as 'tories' all who dared cross him in his plans for remaking the nation and its people? Who else was it that exploded into 'horse and buggy' language when the Supreme Court declared one of his pet measures unconstitutional? Who else was it that pinned the label of 'economic royalists' on the great body of American business men? Who else was it that described his unnamed opponents as representatives of 'entrenched greed'?"

There is general acceptance of the theory that class warfare, if it should be precipitated by partisan political appeals, would be fatal to the American system of government. The Federal Constitution recognizes no class distinctions. It places all citizens on a basis of absolute equality before the law. It does not permit special privileges for any particular group nor impose special duties upon others

Examples in Europe.

The history of the rise of dictatorships in several European nations is cited frequently by those who fear that the New Deal's attempt to set up class distinctions is dangerous to the American system. In practically every case in recent history where a dictatorship has been established it has been founded upon the desire of some particular group for power over other groups. In Russia it is the Communist minority which dominates; in Germany the Nazis; in Italy the Fascists.

It is also regarded as significant that while in the instances mentioned there is a nominal dictatorship of a particular group, in actuality there is a dictatorship by one individual. That is a feature which causes concern on the part of those who have noted Mr. Roosevelt's attempt to combine legislative and executive power in his own hands and his impatience when some of his experiments have been halted by the interposition of the constitutional powers of the Supreme Court.

The entire situation is something new in American politics. It is regarded as having potentialities of grave danger.

"Non-Political"

Mr. Roosevelt has conducted much of his campaign by making what he called "non-political" trips and speeches. In January of this year he delivered a message to Congress through a radio microphone. In September he issued a summation of the budget which some irreverent persons described as a campaign document. There was general relief for the puzzled people when the President finally confessed that after all he was a candidate for re-election.

New Deal Costs

The Roosevelt Administration during the past three fiscal years has collected eleven billions of dollars from the taxpayers. That, however, has not been nearly enough to meet the expenses of the New Deal.

In addition to the eleven billions of dollars collected, the administration has signed the taxpayers' name to promissory notes for twelve billions of dollars more—that's what government borrowing means.

Economy Promises

In 1932 the Democratic Platform promised a reduction in government expenditures of 25 per cent. The Roosevelt administration took office on March 4, 1933.

For the fiscal year 1933 (ending June 30, 1933) the Federal government's expenditures totalled $5,143,000,000.

For the fiscal year 1936 the Federal government's expenditures totalled $8,880,000,000—an increase of 72 per cent.

Our Book of Rules

The best argument against communism, socialism, fascism and many other isms is the simple fact that they conflict with Americanism. The star-eyed theorists and dreamers want to make their own rules for governing other people. They overlook the fact that the people want to rule themselves and have done pretty well with that old book of rules called the United States Constitution.

Relief Muddled; Who's to Blame?

Administration's War on Employers Seen as Factor.

President Roosevelt repeatedly has declared that the unemployment problem was at the bottom of the continued necessity for huge expenditures for relief. Let private enterprise absorb the unemployed, he says, and relief expenditures will be slashed. Until that takes place spending will continue.

The effort of the New Deal thus to place the blame for continued "emergency" conditions on industry and trade, if successful, would give the Administration some sort of an excuse for the failure of the recovery and relief programs of the last four years. Expenditures for recovery and relief have been about $19,000,000,000 since the depression began. Yet there are still an estimated 10,000,000 persons unemployed, just as there were in the fall of 1933, soon after Mr. Roosevelt took office There were 22,000,000 persons dependent upon direct relief or work relief in March, 1936, —a greater number than were on the relief rolls in the Spring of 1935.

Millions Back At Work.

An interesting recent disclosure is that as a matter of fact industry and trade actually have absorbed more than 5,000,000 unemployed since 1933. These figures made public by the Department of Commerce are supported by a public statement by Secretary Perkins of the Labor Department Miss Perkins has said further that "an appreciable number of manufacturing industries are employing more workers now than they did in 1929". That year, it will be remembered was the boom year when employment was at its peak. Then why the criticism of the employers, big and little, who have done this hiring?

The man on the street, confused by contradictory statements and statistics of the New Deal, has been asking the press of the country to explain why the Roosevelt Administration puts so many obstacles in the way of private enterprise and at the same time demands that it expand operations and employ more workers.

Attacks On Business

Obstacles created by New Deal policies include the 1936 Tax Act which imposes a heavy penalty on businesses which are trying to build up a reserve of savings so that they may expand, hire more men and be prepared for a rainy day. A second obstacle is the Government's increasing competition with private enterprise, including banking, real estate and power and light companies. A third obstacle is the WPA policy of making made-work jobs and wages so attractive that great numbers of employable men and women refuse to go into jobs that are productive as well as useful. A fourth obstacle is the Agricultural Administration's policy of restricting cultivation of millions of acres of good farm land, thus throwing hundreds of thousands of farm workers out of jobs. The cotton curtailment program alone threw Southern workers on relief in numbers estimated at from 1,000,000 to 2,000,000 persons.

Those are only a few of the New Deal influences that are hindering rather than helping re-employment. Economists point out that the present Administration contributes largely to the whole relief emergency. Its next step in the circle is to ask Congress for more billions.

Where Are the 10,000,000?

No figures have been assembled as to just how much damage is done to private enterprises when they are all apparently included in a contemptuous classification as "economic royalists" Or when they are charged with having "forgotten what the Constitution and the flag stand for." Business men, however, including the little fellows as well as the big ones, are asking if abusing them is a new method of inducing them to employ more workers—after they have already done a pretty good job of it in the face of New Deal interference.

Meanwhile the question is being asked daily: "Where are these 10,000,000 unemployed?" After four years of experiment and expenditure of bilhons for recovery and relief the President in his latest fireside chat said he was allocating $2,500,000 for a study of the unemployment problem. In the meanwhile about $2,500,000,000 will be spent in the present fiscal year to make work-relief jobs and to provide other relief.

Inflation.

Food prices are 40 per cent higher than they were in 1933. Cost of living has gone up more than 19 per cent. Beneficiaries of insurance policies and holders of savings accounts, if they were to realize on these assets today, would find therefore that the purchasing power of their dollar would be substantially reduced from 1933 figures. Inflationary policies of the present Administration have contributed to reduction of purchasing power.

Quody.

The Passamaquoddy Dam buildings are to be used as a training school. Why not a course of instruction in building dams?

Landon Promises Relief for Needy

Thrift and End of Pork Barrel Will Balance Budget, He Says.

CLEVELAND, O.—"If I am elected chief executive of this country, the federal budget is going to be balanced!" Gov. Alf M. Landon told a wildly enthusiastic crowd which overflowed the public auditorium here. "But it is not going to be balanced at the expense of our needy unemployed," he said. "They are entitled to ample relief for their needs and I shall see that they get it."

Following through with a ringing denunciation of waste and politics in relief under the Roosevelt administration, he declared: "Nobody in America knows exactly how many of our citizens are out of work, nobody knows how many are on relief. . .

"This administration has found time to make tourist guide books. It has found money to classify fossils. It has spent seven and one-half billion dollars of the taxpayers' money in the name of relief. But it has found neither time nor money to inform itself of the extent and nature of the relief problem."

Gov. Landon pledged himself to the Republican formula of state administration of relief, aided by grants from the federal government. He proposed these four conditions: State and local governments should bear a fair share of the cost. All engaged in the administration of relief should be chosen on their merit. Relief clients should be allowed to take temporary jobs, returning to relief rolls when the jobs are finished, and an employment service should be operated to assist them. Public works should be undertaken on their merit and not confused with relief administration.

He summed up the "box score" of the Roosevelt administration:

"Twenty-five billion dollars spent.

"Thirteen billion dollars added to the public debt.

SUPERINTENDENT'S LETTER

Patrons and Friends

The school board has taken action to remedy a situation which has brought itself to the attention of several people in town We refer to the automobile traffic near the school

As soon as possible the board will purchase or have made, signs which will require a complete stop of motor vehicles on approaching the school This may seem drastic at first, but everyone who views it in the right light will see it as the one sensible solution to a problem that might become very serious

The purpose of this letter is to request that in the meantime before the signs are here, all drivers please recognize the fact that when 165 children are confined within one-half block, there might occasionally be one of them who will overstep the bounds and run into the road Cautious driving is necessary to avoid accidents

CAN WE COUNT ON YOU?

Sincerely yours,
W Henry Galbreth

Salute From the New to Old in Transportation

This remarkable photograph was obtained at Pendleton, Ore., as a high-speed twin-engined transport plane of United Air Lines soared over a mule-freighter bound for the Pendleton Round Up. The plane, with its 1100 "horses," has a top speed of 202 miles an hour; the freighter, pulled by 12 mules, does well to cover four miles an hour. Planes operating between the Pacific Northwest, Midwest, and East follow the old historic Oregon Trail formerly used by covered wagons, stage-coaches and freighters.

BILLY MINK POSSESSES THE WANDERING FOOT

WHEN a person becomes uneasy and cannot settle in one place for any length of time, but wants to keep traveling, he is said to be possessed of the wandering foot. This means that he wants to wander about in search of new scenes and new adventures. To put it very plainly, he becomes a sort of tramp

You remember that when Billy Mink discovered the traps along the Laughing Brook he decided that he would go visiting for a while. For some time he had felt a desire to go visiting. These traps gave him a real excuse for so doing. So Billy had turned his back on the Laughing Brook and started for another brook some distance away. He had not intended to go farther than this brook. But when he got there he found that the fishing was not as good as he had hoped it would be, so he decided to keep on moving until he found a place where food was plentiful, and he would be contented for a while.

"This Place Looks Good To Me," Said Billy.

Now, while Billy Mink is a great lover of the water and is almost as much at home in it as Jerry Muskrat, he is equally at home on land. In fact, Billy often wanders long distances from water. He believes in variety and there are times when he would rather hunt than fish. He is a very good hunter, as many a mouse and bird has found out too late.

So, leaving the brook where the fishing was poor, Billy started off across country for nowhere in particular. He is one of the most independent of all the little people of the Green Forest and the Green Meadows. He never worries over where the next meal is coming from. He feels quite capable of taking care of himself wherever he may be. No one understands the art of hiding any better than does Billy Mink. He is quick as a flash, and the way he can disappear when apparently there is nothing to hide under is astonishing.

So Billy wandered about aimlessly just having a good time. He traveled mostly at night, though occasionally he became restless during the day and continued his journey then. In the Green Forest he hunted wood mice and grouse. In the open meadow land he hunted meadow mice. When he came to a brook he went fishing. So, at last, his wanderings brought him to a farmyard. There was a big barn there. Also there was a henhouse containing many hens. Between the henhouse and the barn was a big woodpile At the sight of that woodpile Billy grinned. That was just the sort of a place he liked. You know he is so slim that he can slip through very small places, and he would be quite safe.

"This place looks good to me," said Billy, "I think I'll stay a while."

HINTS FOR THE HOUSEWIFE

WHEN buying meat see that it it is of good color and well mottled with fat.

A fresh fish will be bright of eye and firm of flesh with the odor sweet.

Use nuts in a loaf to take the place of meat. They are highly nourishing and are fine for all sorts of dishes.

If you have a neighbor who is using cake at about the same rate that your family does, why not exchange halves of cakes as two neighborly women do. Thus having a fresh half of cake with no work and no leftover to disturb the conscience.

When making mush for supper, prepare enough for frying for breakfast; everybody likes fried mush with sirup. Pour the hot mush into greased baking powder cans, kept for the purpose. When cold it slices without waste or crumbling.

When food scorches while cooking, set the dish in another of cold water—the steam rising from the food will dissipate the scorched flavor if it is not really burned.

To remove burned food from a dish without scratching, add soda to cold water and simmer until the food is softened.

Aluminum dishes which have been scraped will always have rough spots to catch food and cause burning. They should be rebuffed or they will always burn easily.

Lettuce, endive and such crisp green foods should be served at once after the dressing is added as they wilt readily. Keep lettuce well washed, in a thin bag of cheesecloth in the ice chest. It will be ready at a moment's notice to supply the salad.

With raw fruits and vegetables so popular, did you ever try using fresh young turnips cut on the coarse grater or shredder, also young uncooked beets, served on lettuce with a snappy dressing, either french or boiled? Sprinkle with fresh grated coconut, add a bit of sugar and you will have one of the prettiest of salads and it will taste very good, too.

THE UPWARD LOOK

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

SEEING the rose, I saw a vine
About a mighty trunk entwine,
And found the trunk to be a pine.

And looking up, to see how high
The tree above me, then my eye
Beheld beyond the tree the sky.

And yet we think some holy deed
Of ours the world will never heed,
So small the matter, great the need.

Yet I, who first beheld the rose,
The vine, and then the tree that grows,
Saw Heaven itself its gates unclose.

So has some little deed sufficed
To lift some soul by sin enticed,
Until it looked, and saw the Christ.

THE LANGUAGE OF YOUR HAND

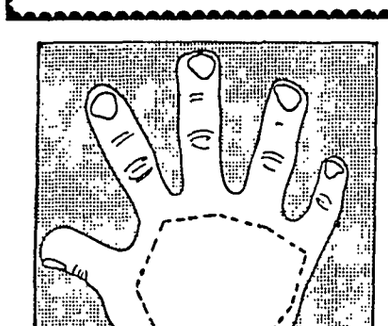
By Leicester K. Davis

© Public Ledger, Inc.



WHEN beginning an analysis of a hand to place its type, be sure to note all the characteristics which make it a distinct type. Note the general shape and conformation, whether short, thick-set, wide or narrow. Note the width of palm, the length and formation of fingers and thumb, whether they are straight, knotted or tapered. The first of the seven types of hands follows:

First. The Primal Type of Hand.

The outstanding characteristic of this type is its short, thick-set appearance. The fingers are stubby and rather clumsy looking. The thumb is extremely short, low set, heavy and often "Clubbed" on the side opposite the nail. The nail joint is often abnormally short and wide.

The palm and underside portions of fingers of this type are always heavily fleshed and when partially folded become pillowed by broad, deep creases.

One would be quite safe in placing the possessor of a hand of true primal type as one who is apt to find more satisfaction in material affairs than in the spiritual, esthetic or sentimental aspects of life.

All things being equal, a primal type of hand indicates pretty surely that the occupation chosen by its owner should be of a kind that calls for manual dexterity rather than concentration or analysis.

A stiff thumb on the primal type of hand is positive indication of a stubborn and overbearing will that is apt to have its own way without counting the costs or the feelings of others. If, however, the thumb may be bent backward with little tension, there is equally positive indication that its owner is very much inclined toward indolence, irresponsibility and extravagance.

On Board the Normandie.—The ancient writer made this admission:

Arthur Brisbane

There be three things which are too wonderful for me, yea, four which I know not:

The way of an eagle in the air; the way of a serpent upon a rock; the way of a ship in the midst of the sea; and the way of a man with a maid.

What would that inspired writer say of this modern ship in the midst of the sea? The biggest ship he ever saw could be hung from the ceiling of the dining salon on this boat or tucked away in a corner of the sun deck, disturbing no one.

A modern ocean liner, Queen Mary, Normandie, Rex or Europa, as it crosses the ocean indifferent to waves and winds, is a small world in itself, a microcosm, with this little earth playing the role of "Cosmos." If this ship should sail to some new, uninhabited island of Utopia, it might supply everything necessary to start a new civilization better than the one invented by Sir Thomas More, who has been made a saint since he wrote "Utopia" to amuse himself and had his head cut off for his Catholic faith.

On board, with his friend, George Bacon, is Myron Taylor, head of the United States Steel company, biggest industrial unit on earth. He would supply the material for skyscrapers, ships, railroads and machinery, plus organization.

Simon Guggenheim would tell them how to make corporations profitable, by "holding on."

Various newspaper workers on the boat would be ready to start "the New Utopia Gazette"; Floyd Gibbons for war correspondent, plus members of the Edward H. Butler family, that own the Buffalo News, and the able Abraham Cahan, known to more New Yorkers than any editor in America, with one exception. And, most important to newspaper prosperity, the ship carries Mrs. George D. Widener of Philadelphia, who has traveled up and down in every corner of the earth and says to your narrator:

"Mr. Brisbane, I have always wanted to meet you, because I read your articles every day."

There spoke the nucleus of a highly intelligent reading public,

Mrs. Vincent Astor, on her way back from a grouse moor in Scotland, would resume her real job of promoting deep music, finding co-operators in the passenger list —Madame Flagstadt, the admirable Norwegian singer, a deep soprano able to make Isolde more impressive than Wagner ever imagined her. If You're Told to "Alkalize"

Try This Remarkable "Phillips" Way Thousands are Adopting

On every side today people are being urged to alkalize their stomach. And thus ease symptoms of "acid indigestion," nausea and stomach upsets.

To gain quick alkalization, just do this: Take two teaspoons of PHILLIPS' MILK OF MAGNESIA 30 minutes after eating OR — take two Phillips' Milk of Magnesia Tablets, which have the same antacid effect.

Relief comes almost at once—usually in a few minutes. Nausea, "gas" — fullness after eating and "acid indigestion" pains leave. You feel like a new person.

Try this way. You'll be surprised at results. Get either the liquid "Phillips" or the remarkable, new Phillips' Milk of Magnesia Tablets. Delightful to take and easy to carry with you. Only 25¢ a box at all drug stores.

ALSO IN TABLET FORM:

Each tiny tablet is the equivalent of a teaspoonful of genuine Phillips' Milk of Magnesia.

A MIRACLE CROP

The drouth of 1936 is having many unexpected results, as illustrated by the remarkable showing being made by the soybean crop, which is now just beginning to figure as a major source of farm income.

In spite of the severe drouth, this year's crop will bring an estimated total of 30 million dollars or equal to the revenue it produced last year, when far better growing conditions prevailed. Experts feel that if farmers receive a dollar a bushel for their beans this year, compared with the former level of about 70 cents, the total income will be as large on a smaller crop.

A large percentage of soybean production goes into industrial processing, which makes the crop one of the most hopeful of future development as compared with farm products which have a limited field for use as food. As one sign of this development it may be mentioned that Henry Ford has recently built a five million dollar soybean plastic plant.

Along with the rapidly increasing use of soybeans in industrial products is seen the growing demand for soybean oilmeal as a protein ingredient of the best commercial feeds for hogs, dairy cows and poultry. All this should encourage a marked expansion of this miracle crop in the next few years.

PHEASANT LOSS WAS 62.5 PERCENT LAST WINTER

There was a 62.5 percent loss of pheasants over the state because of the severe 1936 winter, worst in 117 years, Logan J Bennett, biologist at Iowa State college, announced recently.

These losses were not attributed to the severe weather alone nor to the lack of food alone, but rather to the fact that there was a lack of food near good game cover. Game birds leaving cover in search of food often failed to find their way back to adequate shelter. This winter, wildlife conservationists and sportsmen should put food out closer to cover or right the cover, Bennett suggests.

THE LIFE SPARK

ies in biology and bio-chem- ave developed many very ding facts, many of which have been of inestimable value to mankind, but the ultimate goal of such research is to find the secret of the life spark itself, and produce it from inert matter.

That this will some day be accomplished is the belief of many distinguished scientists, although this belief is flouted by those who hold to the traditional belief in the creation of all life by special acts of a Supreme Being

Prof William Lash Miller, internationally known bio chemist of the University of Toronto, has produced in his laboratory a component part of living matter, and his accomplishment is hailed as one of epochal importance by many fellow scientists

Just what significance may be attached to Prof. Miller's latest discovery is somewhat difficult for a layman to judge, but it appears that it may mark a most important step toward the solution of the age-old question "What is life?"

GREEN TOMATOES NUTRITIOUS

Better pick the last tomatoes green than sacrifice them to those early uncertain frosts Tomatoes picked at the white stage, wrapped and stored will provide ripe tomatoes when the snow flies. Wrap in paper and store at a temperature of 50 degrees F or above Tomatoes stored at a lower temperature will decay

Homemakers who attempt to fill their pickle shelves with quarts of cucumbers will do well to introduce green tomatoes for variety since the food value of green tomatoes considerably exceeds that of cucumbers

Meals for adults will be given an added zest if they include the following green tomato pickles

Slice 1 gallon green tomatoes and one-half dozen large onions, sprinkle down with ½ cup salt and let stand overnight Drain and add ½ dozen sliced lemons Mix 3 cups vinegar and 3 cubs brown sugar, and add to tomato and onion mixture Place 1 tablespoon of mustard seed, 1 tablespoon celery seed, 1 tablespoon whole allspice, 1 tablespoon whole cloves and 1 tablespoon ground mustard in a spice bag add to mixture, and cook gently for ½ hour Remove spices, pack in jars, fill with liquid seal and store

Just Actions

IT IS not possible to found a lasting power upon injustice, perjury, and treachery. These may, perhaps, succeed for once, and borrow for awhile from hope, a gay and flourishing appearance But time betrays their weakness, and they fall into ruin of themselves. For, as in structures of every kind, the lower parts should have the greatest firmness—so the grounds and principles of actions should be just and true. —Demosthenes.

A soul filled with vanity has no room for charity.

Born to Succeed

Whatever your sex or position, life is a battle in which you are to show your pluck; and woe be to the coward. Despair and postponement are cowardice and defeat. Men are born to succeed, not to fail.—Thoreau.

"The Man Who-O-O"

Tales and Traditions from American Political History

BY FRANK C. HIBBEN AND [illegible] SCOTT WATSON

THE REPUBLICAN ELEPHANT

WHY is it that the Republican party, which has dominated the American government for 60 out of the 80 years it has been in existence, should be symbolized by a beast from the African jungles instead of some typical American animal? The answer is that a cartoonist once used a jungle scene to depict a political crisis and the figure of an elephant was so appropriate for what it was supposed to represent that its symbolism persisted long after the crisis itself had passed The cartoonist was Thomas Nast of Harper's Weekly and the crisis was this.

In 1874 it seemed certain that President Grant was determined to run again in 1876 The principal opponent to the third term idea was James Gordon Bennett's Democratic newspaper, the New York Herald, which shrieked "Caesarism!" incessantly. Taking his tip how "An ass, having put on a lion's skin, roamed about the forest and amused himself by frightening all the foolish animals he met with in his wanderings," Nast drew a cartoon which he labelled "The Third Term Panic"

It showed the Herald as a donkey in a lion's skin, labelled "Caesarism," braying loudly and all the animals fleeing in alarm The New York Tribune was represented as a giraffe, the World as an owl dropping an arithmetic book, the Times as a unicorn with a monocle Near-by was a half-concealed fox labelled "Democratic party" but with features suggesting those of Samuel J Tilden

In the foreground was an elephant, labelled "The Republican Party" on the verge of an abyss of Chaos barely hidden by broken planks marked "Inflation," "Repudiation," "Reform (Tammany)" and "Reconstruction" This cartoon was not only a thrust at the Herald but also a half-affectionate jab at Nast's own "huge but timorous" party, the Republicans

Two weeks later Nast drew another cartoon showing an elephant tumbling down into the pit with the rotten planks and the rejoicing animals following it This was called "Caught in a Trap—the Result of the Third Term Hoax." From that time on the elephant was the symbol of the Republican party

THEY SING THE OLD SONGS

TO THE tune of "O, Susanna!" written by Stephen Foster many years ago, supporters of Gov Alf M. Landon of Kansas sang him into the Republican nomination at Cleveland and this banjo-tinkling tune, which cheered westward-bound emigrants in the golden "Days of '49," is being used to cheer eastward - bound (to the White House, they believe) Republican voters in the campaign "Days of '36." Will it drown out the cheerful strains of "Happy Days Are Here Again"? November 3 will answer that!

Not the least of the interest in the renewed singing of "O, Susanna!" is the few instances in which an old familiar song is revived for campaign purposes Setting campaign verses to a familiar tune and using it for political purposes has always been a common practice. As far back as 1840 the Whigs sang a song in praise of Harrison to the tune of "Auld Lang Syne" In 1848, when the Free Soil party nominated Martin Van Buren, new words were written and sung to the tune of "Old Dan Tucker" The old familiar "Yankee Doodle," "Auld Lang Syne" "The Frog He Would a-Wooing Go" and "The Camptown Races" were employed as the musical setting for songs in praise of Fremont in 1856

Considering the fact that a Spanish-American War hero was a vice presidential candidate in 1900 it was only natural that "There'll Be a Hot Time in the Old Town Tonight" should become a Republican campaign song But it wasn't until 1920 that an old song was revived and sung in its original form in support of a presidential candidate In that year "The Sidewalks of New York," written in 1894 by Charles B Lawlor and James W Blake, was played by a band at the San Francisco Democratic convention when Gov Alfred E Smith of New York was introduced and given a great ovation It was his "musical trademark" when he became Candidate Smith in 1924 and Nominee Smith in 1928 Will the revival of "O, Susanna!" bring better luck to Gov Al Landon than the revival of "Sidewalks of New York" did to Gov Al Smith? Again—"read the papers on November 4"

Course of Lightning

The main flash of lightnin does not travel from a cloud to the earth, but in the opposite direction. The main flash is always preceded by a "leader", which acts as a sort of pathfinder or trail blazer. The "pathfinder" travels from the cloud to the earth, while the main flash starts upward from the earth at the point struck by the "leader". It follows exactly the same path back to the cloud. The length of the lightning bolt has been found to vary from 1 5 to 4.7 miles

★★★By VIRGINIA VALE★★★

CAROLE LOMBARD is a happy girl these days. When Alice Marble defeated Helen Jacobs at Forest Hills, N Y., and became our national tennis champion, everybody wanted the racket with which she won She was deluged with telegrams asking for it.

But Carole's telegram arrived first, and Carole is an old friend—so she got the racket. And as all Hollywood is tennis-mad, (as well as polo-mad and football-mad) that was something to cheer about.

Incidentally Alice Marble, who is very pretty, was asked if she'd like to go into pictures. She said she wouldn't.

Joan Blondell

Well, Joan Powell finally Blondell and Dick got married; had the ceremony performed on the ship on which they were sailing through the Panama canal and on to New York for a very gay honeymoon. They were lucky to have three whole weeks between pictures; as it was, Dick had to plan for a broadcast the minute they landed in New York. Joan and Dick are among the most popular stars of Hollywood.

That first broadcast of Major Bowes' for his new sponsors was very much a society affair, with men in formal evening attire and women in low-cut gowns crowding in to hear and see it, and policemen holding back the uninvited.

"Hollywood Boulevard" is a picture that all you old-timers certainly ought to see. John Halliday, Betty Compson, Esther Ralston, Mae Marsh, Charles Ray, Francis X. Bushman—they're all in it, and so are others who made movie history in the silent days.

The picture is interesting, too, because of the very good plot, involving pretty Marsha Hunt, who looks very much like the Gish girls in their early days.

If you have listened to the "Myrt and Marge" programs on the air you've heard a chap named Vinton Haworth, who's about to burst into fame and glory on the motion picture screen.

Some booking agents heard him on the air and got him a screen test. Then, as frequently happens, nothing happened for months. Finally Cliff Reid, who is producing "The Plough and the Stars" for RKO saw the test. He was casting "Without Orders", an aviation story, and took a terrific chance by casting Haworth as the second male lead Bob Armstrong was playing the first lead; the girl was Sally Eilers. And—Mr. Haworth stole the picture!

Mary Carlisle has come along fast since she was just one more of the pretty, blonde girls of whom Hollywood was so full two years ago. They had pretty figures, they were cute—but it was hard, sometimes, to tell them apart.

But see Mary in "Lady, Be Careful" with Lew Ayres, Buster Crabbe, and some other awfully good young actors, and you'll realize that she has developed into a fine young leading woman. It's a riotously funny picture, made from the successful play, "Sailor Beware."

Leslie Howard has made no secret of the fact that he didn't want to go on making pictures in Hollywood. About to do "Hamlet" on the stage in New York, at last, he has also let it be announced that he is one of the organizers of a new motion picture company, called Associated Artists. Dudley Murphy, who has had some experience as a director in Hollywood, and Hugh Walpole, the novelist, are associated with him in the company, which has been formed in London.

ODDS AND ENDS . . . Hollywood is still shocked by Irving Thalberg's death . . . George Brent is planning now to go to London for the coronation next spring . . . There's a dearth of young leading men in Hollywood . . . "Give Me Your Heart," Kay Francis' newest picture, is one of her best, and once again she proves her ability to wear lovely clothes better than most of the girls in Hollywood do . . . Ruby Keeler and Al Jolson celebrated their eighth wedding anniversary the other day . . . Paramount pays George Raft as much money as Metro pays Clark Gable . . . Frank Morgan's mother, one of the country's most successful business women, died recently at the age of eighty-four . . . "Sing, Baby, Sing" is breaking records and making a reputation as one of the year's funniest pictures.

Why Laxatives Fail In Stubborn Constipation

Twelve to 24 hours is too long to wait when relief from clogged bowels and constipation is needed, for then enormous quantities of bacteria accumulate, causing GAS, indigestion and many restless, sleepless nights.

If you want REAL, QUICK RELIEF, take a liquid compound such as Adlerika. Adlerika contains SEVEN cathartic and carminative ingredients that act on the stomach and BOTH bowels. Most "overnight" laxatives contain one ingredient that acts on the lower bowel only.

Adlerika's DOUBLE ACTION gives your system a thorough cleansing, bringing out old poisonous waste matter that may have caused GAS pains, sour stomach, headaches and sleepless nights for months.

Adlerika relieves stomach GAS at once and usually removes bowel constipation in less than two hours. No waiting for overnight results. This famous treatment has been recommended by many doctors and druggists for 35 years. Take Adlerika one-half hour before breakfast or one hour before bedtime and in a short while you will feel marvelously refreshed. Leading Druggists.

Hello Everybody

"Thunder on the Track"

By FLOYD GIBBONS

"HERE'S one for you," says Edward Green of New York city. And then he unwinds the story of an experience that befell him while he was captain, first-mate, chief steward and crew of a one-man trolley car—a yarn that makes him a Distinguished Adventurer.

Now a one-man car is a gadget that was invented so there'd be something that would keep a man busier than that well known one-armed paper-hanger with the hives.

You run them with both hands and both feet like an old-fashioned parlor organ. Ed Green thought he knew what it meant to be busy, after just a few hours operating one of those cars, but he admits now he didn't have any idea of the true meaning of the word until he tried to take care of TWO OF THE CONTRAPTIONS AT THE SAME TIME.

Ed was working on the night shift of the New York & Harlem Railroad company's old Fourth and Madison avenue line. It was Christmas Eve, of the year 1924 He got to the car-barn on time that night, but the man he was to relieve brought the car in late, so Ed had to hurry to make up time

Runaway Trolley Car Threatens Death to Passengers.

He left the barn going at a pretty fast clip, got as far as Madison and Ninety-seventh street and stopped to pick up a passenger. The passenger got on and Ed shut the door with the foot lever while he made change with one hand, rang up the fare with the other and started the car going with—well—I guess it must have been his nose. Then, as the car began moving, and Ed got a spare second, he looked up—and saw something that didn't look altogether right to him.

The car was on a fairly steep grade. Farther on up that grade, at the Ninety-sixth street corner was another one-man trolley, and it was rolling back toward Ed's car at a fast clip! It was mid-winter and a nasty night. The rails were slippery, and it didn't take Ed long to figure out what had happened to that car ahead. It was out of control. Due to crash into his own car in about thirty seconds!

Ed says he forgot everything else for a minute and began figuring out which was the best way to jump and save his life Then he came to his right senses and thought, "What about the passengers?" He might save his own life, but a whole bunch of other people would be killed if he did. No—he had to be a regular guy and stick to his post. He reached up, threw off his overhead switch, and turned to the crowd behind him. "Back to the rear of the car," he shouted. "Run for your lives. There's a runaway car heading straight for us!"

Panic-Stricken Riders Stampede at Crash.

In a second, pandemonium was on the loose. Screaming—shoving, the passengers stampeded for the rear of the car At that moment the crash came. The car ahead struck—with such force that it wrecked the whole front compartment of the one Ed was operating. A sheet of flame shot up between the two vehicles. In the fleeting glimpse Ed got of the crash, he saw that the other car had no motorman aboard. He had jumped for his life shortly after he had lost control.

The first car crashed—and stopped. The impact had given it a pause and given its set brakes a chance to catch hold. But at the same time Ed's car started moving. Ed had thrown off the juice when he saw the other car coming, and now, his own vehicle without any power to control it, was running away on its own.

Ed says that, through some miracle, he managed to keep his head. Something had to stop that car. He turned to the rear again and began fighting his way through the screaming, milling herd of panic-stricken passengers.

Berserk Street Car Butts Automobile Out of Its Path.

The passengers, frantic now, were breaking windows and jumping out. Those who didn't were fighting their way back down the aisle. Ed pushed through the mob to the rear platform. It was the front platform now, for the car was speeding backward down the hill. By the time he got there, the trolley was traveling at breakneck speed. He grabbed for the emergency brake—jammed it on with all his might.

He might as well have saved the effort. The car still careened ahead along the slippery tracks. Behind him, fire flared up again while the crowd screamed and broke more windows. Ahead of him was a street crowded with traffic.

A taxicab shot out ahead of him. The trolley hit it with a crash and tossed it over to the gutter. Another car got in the way and was butted away with a crumpled fender and a broken wheel. Ed says he must have hit half a dozen automobiles during that wild ride, but he was too excited to keep count of them.

Ed's Heroism Is Commended by the Big Boss.

But now the car was nearing the bottom of the hill. It was slowing down. Still blazing at the rear, it ground to a stop, and Ed began getting his passengers out.

Some of them walked out by themselves—and others had to be carried. Ed doesn't remember how many were hurt. He says there must have been plenty, for inside of ten minues there were at least a dozen ambulances on the scene. When all the injured were being taken care of, the fire put out, and the excitement all over, Ed was sitting on the step of the smouldering trolley, a disconsolate figure, wondering whether this business was going to cost him his job.

But Ed didn't have to worry about that. Later on that night, the big boss did come down to the car barn, but not to fire Ed. Instead he came to thank him personally and commend his courage for sticking to his car and thinking of his passengers at a time when the rest of them were thinking only of saving their own skins.

Indians Cruel to Dogs

The burning of a white dog was an annual religious festival of the Indian tribes of Ohio After a pure white dog was found, his legs were tied together so that he could be hung onto a pole that stretched between two forked posts stuck in the ground. Underneath the dog was built a fire, and while the redskins yelled and danced around the primitive altar, the animal would be lowered to and then raised from the blaze. It was slowly tortured until life was gone

Value of Guinea Pigs

The guinea pig or cavy is commonly kept as a pet, possessing the advantages of being clean, harmless and without offensive odor From a commercial point of view, his value is for laboratory and experimental purposes. The original ancestors of the domestic guinea pig are thought to have lived in the highlands of Peru, where they were domesticated by the Incas They were allowed to run freely about the homes of their owners and were probably bred for their food value.

Stay ignorant if you wish to live long. That is the conviction of Aam Mohamed, a Cairo milkman, who claims to have just completed 112 years. He still milks his goats and delivers the milk from door to door, often climbing several flights of stairs. His recipe for life is: Don't drink, don't smoke don't indulge in pleasure, and above all, don't tire your brain with learning.

Mohamed enjoys three hearty meals daily. Two of them consist of beans and the third of meat and vegetables. He has married only once. His wife is still alive. Her "baby"—their youngest son—is aged sixty - five. — Montreal Herald.

NEW HUNTING RULES ARE EXPLAINED BY COMMISSION

The new 1936-37 rules and regulations for the taking of game in Iowa recently adopted by the State Conservation Commission, are, for the most part, similar to those of 1935. Most changes made concern seasons and bag limits. The new rules become effective and have the same force and effect as statutes on November 1, 1936.

Under the new rules, squirrels may be lawfully taken from Sept 15th to Nov 15th; rabbits from Sept. 15th to January 15th; ducks, geese snipes and coot from Nov 1 to Nov 30 No open season on pheasants this year

The shooting or taking of certain species of game is confined to certain hours in the new rules, as waterfowl may be lawfully hunted only between the hours of 7 a. m and 4 p m each day

Daily Bag Limits

The daily bag limit on rabbits remains the same; fifteen per day with the possession limit at two days bag, or 30 rabbits The daily bag limit on squirrels is less than in 1935, and now permits one person to take 6 squirrels each day with two days bag as the possession limit Only 10 ducks in the aggregate of species which may be shot can be taken by any one person and only 10 may be had in possession Four geese may be taken in one day with the possession limit at one day's bag Daily bag and possession limit on coot is set at fifteen The total aggregate number of birds and animals on which there is an open season that any person may have in possession at any time is 30

All game obtained during the open season may be lawfully possessed for 10 days following the close of the season A permit to hold game after the 10 days following the open season may be obtained by application to the Conservation director The application must be made not later than the end of the 10 day period following the open season.

Dogs

The new regulations prohibit the running or training of (bird) dogs from March 15 to July 15 of each year. Trailer dogs may be used for sport at times other than the open season for fur-bearing animals, provided no animal is killed or taken during the closed season.

A fair sized crowd heard the Cotton Blossom Singers at the M. E. Church Friday evening. The quartett sang a program of spiritual numbers.

WELL FILLED PARTY TICKETS GIVE VOTER LARGE CHOICE

Main Issue Centers On Roosevelt Or Landon For President

It is not for us to say for whom you should vote Everyone by this time should have his or her mind made up as to whether they will support Rosevelt and the New Deal, Landon and the Republican Party, or Lemke and his platform on the Union ticket

The Democrats occupy the first column on the ballot and have a complete ticket from President on down thru the county offices.

Next comes the Republican party with a full ticket from President on down.

Farmer Labor Party, 3rd; Communist, 4th; Prohibition 5th; Socialist, 6th; Socialist Labor, 7th; the Union Party 8th with Wm. Lemke for President and Thomas C O'Brien for Vice President, with no other offices asked for And the last column of course is the Independent.

Race Expected To Be Close

Both Democrats and Republicans will split on President. Many, especially the "Jeffersonian" Democrats will support Landon and then jump over for the rest of the ticket. Republicans will do likewise. We know of some Republicans who will support Roosevelt and then jump over and support the Republican state and county ticket The Union party supporters will also "scratch" the ballot after voting for Lemke.

Then, of course, there will be a number of straight ballots cast—ballots that will have but one mark, a cross in the circle at the top of the party column.

County Politics Not Exciting

No one seems to be losing much sleep over the outcome of the county offices. The men in office are efficient and experienced and there seems to be no logical reason for a change there

"Dutch" Brower, who won the nomination for Sheriff should experience little trouble being elected to the office. "Dutch" is a mighty fine young man and has had plenty of experience as Deputy so that he can handle the work in the Sheriff's office efficiently.

Another office to be filled is that of County Recorder. Miss Christyna Callison is a candidate for that office on the Republican ticket. Some years ago Miss Callison served two terms in that office She is well qualified, having had plenty of clerical experience in both county and state work

Everyone Should Vote

We feel that it is the DUTY of every voter to go to the polls on Tuesday, November 3rd and support YOUR candidate The ballot gives us a voice in the government. If we do not vote we have no right to find fault with the way government is run

It is going to be a close race for some of the candidates, so give your candidate your support by voting for him or her.

Hugh Hummel Won The Guessing Contest At Jacobs Store

The guessing contest conducted at the Jacobs store last week came to a close Saturday night when the wagon load of stove parts and nails was weighed. Hugh Hummel's guess was 105 pounds and C. G Waterman guessed 107 pounds. The exact weight was 106 pounds so both men were tied. The two numbers were then put in a can and one drawn out and in this way Hummel was determined the winner. Wert Loger was runner-up with a guess of 107½ pounds.

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted
by William Bruckart

National Press Building Washington, D. C.

Washington.—Some time ago I reported in these columns that Mr. Roosevelt had sent a commission to Europe to study consumer co - operatives. I said at that time that the commission was likely to find itself unable to reach an agreement concerning a report to the President on the consumer co-operatives and that in the event they were able to reach an agreement, the publication of their findings would be delayed until after the election.

Six Men, Six Views

The commission has returned to this country and has gone through its labor pains to the end that there are six different views, an opinion by each of the six different commissioners concerning the value or lack of it that consumer co-operatives have.

But it is important to know developments concerning this commission because it appears that by engaging in an investigation of the consumer co-operatives, the President has awakened a number of different interests in our own country to the fact that there are some kinds of co-operatives which are not helpful. The fuss stirred up by failure of the six commissioners to reach an agreement makes it seem unlikely that there will be any unanimity of opinion in congress if and when Mr. Roosevelt attempts to gain action in a legislative way to encourage creation of these co-operatives. In other words, if a move is made in congress, or if the Chief Executive attempts to force congress to enact legislation favorable to consumer co-operatives, we are likely to see a vigorous legislative battle. Personally, I hope that happens. Unless that end materializes, there is every likelihood that the average person who has not access to full information will be inclined to favor consumer co-operatives, without realizing he is lending his influence, whatever it may be, to fostering institutions that in the end are certain to cause heartaches and financial losses.

I am in a position to say that the one thing upon which the President's commissioners were able to agree was that consumer co-operatives in Europe constitute the focal point for radicalism. Not a single consumer co-operative was found, I am told, that was not controlled, managed or inspired by radicals of one breed or another, mainly, communists. These hotbeds of radicalism constitute "pressure groups" that have been able to impress governments in the various countries of an ability and an influence that do not actually exist with them. That is to say, these groups, like minority groups everywhere, are cohesively organized and they are vocal, in addition. The result is they have been able to force upon peoples in many countries restrictions over private and independent initiative, or to gain for themselves exemptions and privileges not accorded to others. The result is an obvious alignment of peoples into fresh factions, the tendencies of which are dangerous.

It may be news to many persons that we have consumer co-operatives in this country and that these agencies or units already are being fostered by the United States government. I refer to the activities of Professor Rexford Guy Tugwell, who has installed in the resettlement colonies various and sundry consumer co-operatives. It may be news as well to many to learn that Mr. Tugwell has spent almost two million dollars in financing these co - operatives to get them started. And the third bit of news respecting this circumstance is that a book written by James Peter Warbasse is being used as a guide for the creation of these consumer co-operatives in federal resettlement projects.

Tugwell's Activities

Now, the name of James Peter Warbasse may not seem important. Many persons have written books, but there are not many volumes extant in the United States that advocate changes in the form of our government. Yet, there are propositions in the volume to which I have referred which do just that and these books, as I have said, are serving more or less as a guide for the people whom Professor Tugwell has "resettled."

With this brief presentation of the facts, it seems to me it does not take much imagination to see the basis upon which the promoters of the consumer co - operatives are building their structure in this country. Taking these facts into consideration with the information brought back by those who made the study for Mr. Roosevelt, it is made to appear at least that a foreign link is somehow or other being forged, and that link, I believe, is designed as a fundamental unit in the general radical program to change the form of our government as well as the form of our national life. I can arrive at no other conclusion.

There is still another phase of this general proposition of consumer co-operatives that ought to be of interest to every producer in this country. Let us assume, for example, that they were perfect in organization and management; that they prospered and expanded in numbers and that they were rendering genuine service to the people. If that condition were to obtain, does it not occur as a natural question that with so much strength, the consumer co-operatives would eventually establish a class alignment between producer and consumer? It seems to me that the natural course of events would lead to this end, and if it did lead to this end I am afraid that because there are more consumers than there are producers, the producers would get the dirty end of the deal. They would be short-changed because they would be outnumbered.

Another Phase

This phase seems the more important because the food stores, food fields generally, are the sectors in which these consumer co-operatives operate best. As a matter of fact, the food field is the most fertile field for experiments anyway and here is quite apparently another experiment that has fastened, or is fastening itself as a parasite upon the agricultural industry of this country.

I know there has been some argument that the consumer co-operatives are the answer to the effort to destroy chain stores. That is not so. Chain stores in foreign countries have licked the co-operatives. They have virtually destroyed them where the co-operatives attempted to drive the chain stores out of business. It becomes important then to recognize that while the United States has many chain stores, it has not now and never will have as many chain stores as it has independents.

Again, here is a threat to independent business men, particularly to the small shop owner, whether he be in a large city or in the thousands of small towns and villages where the owners of such stores are important to their communities and pillars of strength in our national society. If the consumer co-operatives get going, I predict a further decline in the number of independent merchandise houses throughout the United States. For that reason, if for none of the others that I have outlined, it does seem important that the consumer co-operatives move in this country should be stopped in its tracks and that those responsible in an official way for encouraging this sort of thing should be shorn of power.

It may seem a far cry from the farm field to the price of beer as a working man finds it, but there is a direct connection and recent developments again demonstrate the fact that our whole economic structure is quite closely related. There is an increase coming in the price of beer. Either the working man and others who like beer are going to pay more for it, or else they will get a smaller glass. The answer is that ingredients entering into the production of beer have increased in price to such an extent that, according to official figures, the brewers are now paying about $1.50 more for the things that enter into the production of one barrel of beer than they did when the sale of beer again was legalized.

Then There's Beer

This circumstance is significant for the reason that it shows conclusively how tampering with the currency upsets the general balance within our economic structure and results sometimes in displacement of markets and sometimes in diminution of sales. In the case of beer it probably will result in a displacement of markets, rather than any decline in the amount of beer consumed, despite the fact that the ultimate consumer will be paying more.

This condition is of interest to agriculture generally because it has always been contended by the proponents of open sale of beer and whiskey that a substantial new outlet for farm crops was made available by the repeal of the Eighteenth amendment. Rather, it was a restoration of an old outlet that existed before the Eighteenth amendment was adopted. But there has been a combination of circumstances, largely the result of governmental messing, that has mitigated against the farmers obtaining full benefit from repeal. These may be enumerated as follows: Devaluation of the dollar, crop restriction under the Agricultural Adjustment act, higher taxes, and a tendency on the part of the Roosevelt administration to increase imports from abroad.

In the case of the devaluation of the currency, the main purpose, as announced by the Roosevelt administration, was to increase prices. It has had that effect and has made the brewers pay more for the hops they must import from abroad, and they must import hops because our own production is insufficient.

A Boost for Home Sewing!

HERE are three Sewing Circle specialties that are as easy to make as humming a tune. If you've never made a stitch before, here's your golden opportunity, for step-by-step sewing instructions are included with every pattern to direct you all the way until you've completed a frock that'll win a round of applause in any circle and flattering compliments on your slim figure and chic appearance. For an inexpensive, but extensive wardrobe just glance at this charming array of exquisite frocks.

Pattern No 1945-B is a smashing hit in any office or social gathering and versatility personified. You can wear it as shown on the large figure with contrasting collar and cuffs and a self-fabric belt or make it with a twin collar and cuff, introducing another harmonizing color. It's outstanding because of its neat and trim appearance and because it makes up nicely in almost any choice bit of material. Cotton, shantung, silk, broadcloth, crepe or satin are a few exciting fabric mediums that create excellent effects. It is available for sizes: 12, 14, 16, 18 and 20. Corresponding bust measures: 30, 32, 34, 36 and 38. Size 14 requires four yards of 39-inch material plus two-thirds yard contrast.

Pattern No. 1914-B is an alluring double duty frock; simple, inexpensive and the proud possessor of a sleek silhouette. It's a marvel for getting around the kitchen in a jiffy and just the thing for visiting, shopping or business. Depending of course on the material you select. For housewear, try a gingham, percale or cotton with a bit of color to pep you up, and for a more dressier effect choose striped shirting, broadcloth, lightweight wool or crepe. It is available for sizes: 34, 36, 38, 40, 42, 44, 46 and 48. Size 36 requires three and three-fourths yards of 39-inch material.

Pattern No. 1870-B. Those of you whose figures run to width will join your slimmer sisters in choosing this gay slenderizing ensemble, with a contrasting scalloped collar and jabot, so flattering to the face. The effect is exquisite in satin, crepe, broadcloth or silk, the result wholly and completely satisfying. With or without the jacket the frock is the ultimate in utility and style. It is available for sizes: 34, 36, 38, 40, 42, 44 and 46. Size 36 requires six and one-fourth yards of 39-inch material plus seven-eighths yard contrast.

Never allow cold water to run into an aluminum pan while it is hot. If done repeatedly the rapid contraction of metal will cause pan to warp.

Chris J. Johansen, Prop.

To the Voters of Hancock County

My Democratic opponent, Paul Loth, in his campaign for votes has made the statement that I am alone responsible for an increased levy of taxes for road purposes for 1937.

In this connection I wish to state that the present Board consists of two Republicans and one Democratic member An increased levy has been made for road purposes for 1937 It would be impossible for any one member to increase the taxes as no tax can be levied without a majority vote In the increase of levy for road purposes, the vote was unanimous The reasons for the increased levy is that it was the opinion of the Board that it would be false economy to grade new roads and then fail to surface them with gravel, and that it is false economy to fail to maintain the county graveled roads now in existence There are many miles of new graded roads which should be graveled in 1397 There are hundreds of miles of graveled roads in the county that must be maintained, many of which were built many years ago and if gravel is not added and the roads are not properly maintained, the County would lose many thousands of dallors by such neglect. I do not believe that spending money to preserve what you have is waste or extravagance and the levy for road purposes in 1937 is for just that purpose I dare say no other county can boast of a more complete system of county roads and a better maintained system than Hancock County.

It must be kept in mind that the county roads only are under the supervision of the Supervisors, and that it is these roads which give an outlet to the farmer, and if building county roads for the farmers and maintaining those roads now make for a waste of money, then Mr Loth is right, and anyone who does not believe in good roads and the maintenance of roads already built, and the clearing of snow from the roads in the winter time, which costs money, should vote for Mr. Loth

Mr Loth has repeatedly said that I have refused to cooperate with Federal and State governments in the administration of Poor Relief If he means by that, that I have refused to vote to join the Federal and State setup, and turn over hard earned dollars paid by taxpayers of Hancock County for Poor Relief, to a bureaucracy maintained at Des Moines, I most emphatically plead guilty to the charge Much pressure has been brought upon the Board of Supervisors, from Des Moines, to compel us to turn over money raised for Poor Relief, to this bureaucracy The results eloquently claim that the Board was right Hancock County spent for Poor Relief in 1935 $13,942 05 Winnebago County which is less in population than Hancock County, "cooperated" as Mr Loth insists Hancock County should have done That county joined the Federal and State setup The administration of Poor Relief in Winnebago County in 1935 was $29,322 46 Any interested person, upon investigation will find that the counties which "cooperated," as he claims we should have done, have paid, three, four, five and six times as much for the administration of Poor Relief than was paid by the county which spent its own money and refused to send it to Des Moines to be administered by political parasites

Does Mr Loth mean that if he is elected, he will use his influence to see that the money paid into our County Treasury by the taxpayers of Hancock County, is sent to Des Moines? Does he intend, if elected to "cooperate" by permitting a bureaucracy in Des Moines to use your money and my money instead of having it spent by your locally elected officials? If you believe that the taxpayers money collected for Relief administration should be administered from Des Moines, and that less than fifty cents on every dollar collected should be used for Relief, and the rest of it spent in "cooperation" for which he contends a vote for Mr Loth will undoubtedly accomplish that purpose

I am a heavy taxpayer in Hancock County and feel that all taxpayers have the right to say how and where their tax money shall be spent. If I am elected I pledge the same careful conservative administration of the county's business as I have attempted in the past If you believe I have succeeded your vote will be appreciated If, on the other hand, you do not believe I have given careful and conscientious service, then I have no right to expect your vote.

Respectfully submitted,

G. E. KLIPPING

YOU'VE heard stories of panics in halls and theaters—of panics on sinking ships and in crowded circus tents, but it's a good idea to remember that not all panics happen in enclosed spaces. Here's one that happened out in the open An eye-witness account of the historic panic of Brooklyn bridge, told by a newspaper man of the day—Timothy T. O'Connell, of Elmhurst, L. I

Maybe some of you remember that panic Maybe some of you were caught in it. It was on Decoration Day, 1883, that Brooklyn bridge was thrown open to the public. Tim O'Connell was just a cub reporter then, and he felt pretty proud when his paper sent him to cover the ceremony.

"But I might not have been so proud," he says, or so keen on going, if I'd known what was going to happen."

It Was a Happy, Chattering Throng.

Things went smoothly enough for a time, Tim says. The crowd was the usual mob of sightseers, drawn from all walks of life There were doctors and laborers, butchers and bakers, parents with their children, clerks with their sweethearts, and old folks who gazed in awe at the huge trellises and networks of great twisted-wire cables. They thronged the big new bridge, chattering and laughing. "It was an orderly, leisurely crowd," Tim says, "until suddenly some idiot yelled: 'THE BRIDGE IS FALLING DOWN'"

Such words, in a place like that, are nothing short of verbal murder. The cry was taken up by others There were shouts of fire and an ominous buzzing of rumors through the crowd Faces turned white. There was a moment when a stupor seemed to settle over the walks jammed with pedestrians. THEN, SUDDENLY, CAME PANDEMONIUM—CHAOS!

"Men in panic" says Tim, "are disposed to believe anything they hear. The alarms struck terror into thousands of hearts. There followed a scene scarcely to be conceived—or believed—by anyone who did not witness it. Wild tumult! Howling and shouting! The shrieks of women, some of them with small children in their arms, who were being jostled, knocked down and trampled by others in their wild haste to reach the end of the bridge.

Turned Into a Brutal, Selfish Mob.

"In the mad rush to save themselves, people stripped themselves of all their burdens. Handbags, canes, umbrellas, were thrown aside. They got under foot making it all the more difficult for those in the rear to advance. The crowd surged, and fought, and trampled. A father seized his baby and lifted it from its carriage just in the nick of time Ten seconds later the carriage was demolished"

No pen could describe all the horror and brutality of that scene, and Tim O'Connell doesn't claim that his old typewriter can either. But like a good reporter he caught the spirit of terror as it stalked across that bridge and sent it to me in whole pages of fine, moving description The panic had started near the Manhattan end of the bridge There, a deadlock of tightly packed humanity was jamming the exit Before two minutes had passed, the dread, maniacal fear had spread to the center of the span and more thousands of people rushed toward the Manhattan side, doubling the congestion and adding to the havoc

The crowd now as one pulsing, terror-stricken sea of heads milling, fighting, screaming. Stalwart men trampled over prostrate bodies. ONE GIANT OF A MAN, GONE COMPLETELY BERSERK, PLUNGED THROUGH THE STRUGGLING MASS, KNOCKING OVER WOMEN AND CHILDREN. As far as Tim could see there was nothing but bedlam, and shrieking and scuffling of feet. To save himself from being ground under them, Tim started to climb a trellis of wire cable. Others followed his lead and Tim was forced to climb higher to enable them to get a foothold. Clinging there with bruised hands he looked down on the scene, and then, like a good reporter HE STARTED TO TAKE NOTES.

Tough Job for an Ambitious Reporter.

His notebook had fallen from his pocket, so he tore off his cuff—a stiff, three-inch one of the kind worn at that period. He couldn't balance it against the swaying cable—couldn't hold it and write with his one free hand. The cuff slipped away and fell into the river. He tore out the stiff bosom of his shirt and tried that. That too slipped from his bruised fingers.

A cloud of black smoke from a river craft rose from below and enveloped him in its suffocating folds. He was getting dizzy, and fixed his eye on the horizon to steady himself. His head was spinning, but he hung on until the bridge cleared a bit and a rescue squad forced its way through the crowd assuring people that there was nothing the matter—that they were victims of a false alarm.

Tim and his companions on the trellis were assisted down to the roadway, their hands torn and bleeding. On the way down Tim rescued a kitten that was mewing pitifully—carried it with him into the improvised ambulance. The ambulance took them to a nearby saloon where they were given an alcoholic restorative and the kitten got a dish of milk.

"Some months later," Tim says, "I saw that same kitten curled up in a chair outside that same saloon. But there was no recognition in her closed, drowsy eyes. That's gratitude for you. But for me it would have been floating in a watery grave."

District of Columbia Courts

The supreme court of District of Columbia is a court of original jurisdiction with general jurisdiction the same as a federal district court, and local jurisdiction the same as state courts. The United States court of appeals for the District of Columbia is the highest local court. The parallelism between the supreme court of the District and the court of appeals of the District, on the one hand, and the district courts of the United States and the circuit court of appeals, on the other, in the consideration and disposition of cases involving what among the states would be regarded as within federal jurisdiction, is complete.

Cowbird Hitchhiker.

The cowbord ranks as a prime grafter of the feathered kingdom, lazy and tricky and possibly one of the first of the hitch-hikers. The bird is usually observed following along in the wake of cows, picking up insects which are disturbed by the cow while grazing. With its food thus easily acquired, the cowbird apparently turns its attention to other forms of labor-saving. When it desires to go places with no effort it hops to the back of a cow and rides free, although not with control over the direction of the traveling. Even the female is lazy. She builds no nest, but lays her eggs in the nest of another bird, one usually of a smaller type.

Tales and Traditions from American Political History

BY FRANK E. HAGEN AND ELMO SCOTT WATSON

FARMERS' CHAMPION

OF ALL the leaders of third party movements, probably no one has caused the two major parties more concern than did Gen James B Weaver of Iowa For he was the nominee of two new parties which, at two different periods in our history, capitalized on the unrest of the farm vote and in one case he definitely contributed to the overthrow of the party in power.

Weaver was first the standard-bearer for the Greenbackers, a party which came into existence in 1868 because of the dissatisfaction of the farmers with the financial policies of Grant's administration. They were inflationists who demanded that a large amount of paper money be issued without regard to specie payment They received their name from the fact that legal-tender notes were printed in green and called greenbacks. In the campaign of 1876 they nominated Peter Cooper, the New York philanthropist, but he polled only 80,000 popular votes and did not receive a single electoral vote

In the congressional elections of 1878 the Greenbackers cast a million votes and the Republicans in power looked apprehensively to the presidential campaign of 1880, especially when the Greenbackers nominated a man from the agricultural West But their fears were groundless, for the Greenbackers could muster only a little more than 300,000 votes and, although Garfield won over Hancock by less than 10,000 popular votes, he got 214 electoral votes to his opponent's 155

Twelve years later the Republicans had much more to worry over when Weaver bobbed up again, this time as the nominee of the Populist or People's party which declared for free silver, public ownership of monopolies, postal savings banks and an income tax In the state and congressional elections of 1890 they carried the legislatures of Kansas and Nebraska, elected nine members of congress and forced 84 others, Democrats and Republicans, to pledge themselves to carry out Populist ideas In the presidential campaign of 1892 Weaver polled more than 1,000,000 votes in the West and South and corralled 22 electoral votes. The Populists also carried several state legislatures and sent five senators to Washington

"SMITH FOR PRESIDENT"

SINCE the United States has more people bearing the name of Smith than any other family name, it is only natural perhaps that there should have been more presidential candidates by that name than any other.

The first was Joseph E. Smith, founder of the Church of Latter Day Saints and prophet of the Mormon religion, who in 1844 condemned the policies of both the Whig and the Democratic parties and announced his candidacy for the presidency. However, his martyrdom at the hands of an Illinois mob in June of that year cut short his political career

Four years later another Smith was in the field as a candidate—Gerrit Smith, the New York philanthropist, who was one of the founders of the Liberty party in 1840 and its candidate for President in 1848. In that year he was also indorsed for the presidency by the Industrial Congress at its convention in Philadelphia. Again in 1852 Smith was the candidate of the Liberty party and again he was indorsed by another group, this time by the Land Reformers. In neither case did Smith or his party figure very prominently in the election.

In 1876 there was another one of the name in the presidential race. He was Green Clay Smith, a native of Kentucky, a veteran of the Mexican and Civil wars, rising to the rank of brigadier-general in the Union army before resigning to take his seat in congress to which he had been elected while in the field. Re-elected to congress, he resigned to become the second territorial governor of Montana After three years of service in the West he resigned to enter the ministry of the Baptist church in Washington. Soon afterwards he was chosen as the first presidential nominee of the modern Prohibition party.

Just as this "dry" Smith failed to win in 1876, so did a "wet" Smith fail to win half a century later. For Alfred E. Smith, the Democratic candidate in 1928, suffered the fate of all his predecessors—defeat.

Famous Belgian Cathedral

Malines has much to interest visitors but the Cathedral of St. Rombold is the outstanding attraction of the city. It was commenced in the early Twelfth century and took 200 years to complete, and is one of the finest Gothics in Belgium. It has a solitary western tower, 324 feet in height and out of proportion with the rest of the building. Its clock face is enormous—more than forty feet across and nearly twice as large as Big Ben on the houses of parliament in London.

About the Octopus

Greek Fisherman With His Octopus Catch

Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.

THERE is a fascination about sea creatures. Some, however, to the average layman, are fascinating only at a distance Consider the octopus.

With its relatives, the squid, cuttle fishes, the pearly nautilus, and argonaut, the octopus belongs to one of the most remarkable groups in the animal kingdom, the Cephalopoda, meaning the animals that have their heads united with their feet.

Some octopuses are relatively small animals with a centrally located bulb-shaped body about two inches in length, erected above a head with a pair of gleaming eyes, for the creatures actually stand on their heads! The mouths are pointed downward and are surrounded by eight radiating arms, which together correspond to the "feet" familiar in other mollusks

As one examines 12-inch specimens it is hard to realize that their relatives, the common octopuses of European and West Indian waters, have arms five feet in length, giving their possessors a spread of ten feet or more, while the great Octopus apollyon of the Pacific is known to attain the enormous diameter of twenty-eight feet! Their cousins, the giant squid, practically double these dimensions from the tip of their tail to the end of their great tentacular arms, and are the largest invertebrate animals known to man

It seems impossible that these huge creatures, the submarinelike giant squid, with its efficient method of propulsion and aggressive habit and the weird, soft-bodied octopus, with its baleful eyes, protean changes of form and color, and repulsive manner of engulfing its prey—both among the most active and intelligent inhabitants of the sea—should belong to the same animal phylum as the lowly snail and clam. Yet science found that such is the case

Marauder of the Sea

The common octopus is one of the most gruesome marauders of the sea. Hiding in rocky crevices on the bottom, or squatting in the midst of a nestlike lair of boulders, which it has dragged together, the repulsive creature lies in wait for its prey, the eight tapering arms sprawling in all directions, extending, clinging to the rocks with their powerful sucking disks, or undulating through the crevices as they explore everything within reach.

The large, coldly staring eyes are elevated on rounded protuberances, enabling it to see in all directions. Should an unwary fish or crustacean venture within reach, a long tapering tentacle darts forth, the slender tip encircles the prey, which struggles desperately to escape the adherent suckers, but without success, and the hapless creature is dragged down to the cruel jaws to be torn apart by the parrotlike beak.

This species of octopus is equipped with a double row of suckers, arranged alternately, along the underside of its arm, gradually diminishing in size toward the slender, tapering tips. At their base, the arms are united by a membrane forming a flexible funnel, which engulfs the captured victim and presses it against the jaws in the circular mouth-opening at the bottom.

Though the octopus appears sluggish as it creeps over the ocean floor, nevertheless, on occasion, it swims rapidly backward through the water, trailing its tentacles out around its head in a stream-lined bundle. It propels itself like a skyrocket by shooting a stream of water from its siphon in the direction opposite to its motion.

Colorful in Battle

Occasionally two individuals meet in seemingly mortal combat, their tentacles twisted in a tangled mass as they strike at each other with their murderous, curved beaks. When excited, their color patterns, which normally are changing through various shades and mottlings of brown, yellow, and tan, become more vivid, and the warty prominences of their bodies project rigidly Waves of red, purple, violet, and blue successively suffuse the body, sometimes standing out in contrasting colors on different areas at the same time

A black, inky fluid may be discharged from the siphon, in the murk of which the beast conceals its maneuvers. When the octopus creeps over a sandy stretch, its colors fade to pale tan or grayish white, harmonizing with the surroundings so perfectly that the creature becomes practically invisible.

Various tales are related of octopuses attacking persons who attempted to prevent them from returning to the sea Occasionally, apparently authenticated cases are reported of encounters between divers and octopuses on the Pacific coast.

Pearl divers in the Pacific islands tell of fights with octopuses, and such incidents have strayed into literature, from Pliny to Victor Hugo These are often inaccurate or exaggerated. In "Toilers of the Sea" Hugo describes a fight between Gilliatt and an octopus which, though thrilling, is erroneous, and even the spirited drawing of Gustave Dore depicts an octopus unlike any that ever existed.

Nevertheless, the 28-foot octopus of the Pacific, or even large examples of the common octopus of Europe and the West Indies, are formidable antagonists at bay.

The common octopus is one of about 200 species belonging to the order Octopoda Most of them live in comparatively shallow water, about 100 fathoms or less, though deep-sea octopods are dredged from time to time. One of the weirdest of the deep-sea species is Baird's Octopus (Octopus bairdii), a pale, bluish-gray creature, with gleaming black eyes and elongate, tapering soft "horns" (or cirri) above them, ornamented with knobs on their sides Its entire body is covered with minute, granular tubercles. As is usual among octopuses, the third tentacle on the left-hand side in the male is modified for sexual purposes. In this species, the tentacle terminates in a spoon-shaped structure with nine transverse ridges across it.

Some Strange Species

The fairylike Dancing Octopus (Octopus bermudensis) of Bermuda may be seen flitting about in the shallow, transparent water among the coral reefs. The brown body, spotted with white, is balanced gracefully upon long, slender tentacles. Some of these wave about like the arms of a tiny sprite; others pirouette upon the sandy bottom, barely touching it with their tips, for all the world like a ballet dancer.

In striking contrast to these species, the Umbrella Octopus (Opisthoteuthis agassizi) flaps about through the water, alternately opening and closing a parasollike membrane, thus assisting the siphon, which propels the animal through the oceanic depths by shooting a stream of water from the mantle cavity. This peculiar membrane connects the eight arms almost to the tips and, when spread out, is an efficient animal trap, enfolding within its embrace any fish or crustacea with which it may come in contact.

One of the most remarkable of all the cephalopods is the Argonaut, or Paper Nautilus (Argonauta argo). This delicate creature is so fairylike and so beautiful that it seems impossible it should be classed with the Octopoda, yet the eight arms and other structural characters betray close relationship. Its most remarkable feature is the fragile paper "shell," or "boat," of the female argonaut, famed in song and story. In it she was supposed to sail over tropic seas, unfurling the expanded tips of two of her arms as sails, or, as some poets have fondly imagined, using them as oars.

Eggease of the Argonaut

These theories were long ago proved erroneous, but the truth is even more marvelous. The "shell" is not a true shell, comparable to that of other mollusks, for it is not secreted by the mantle. It is really an eggcase, formed between the oval expansions terminating the first pair of arms. The arms are held together, and gradually a thin gelatinous material appears between them. This is molded on the inner surface of the membranous expansions, and slowly hardens through exposure to the water to a spiral papery substance, sculptured with parallel ridges of most delicate texture. The two halves of the shell are joined on one margin to form a keel decorated by a double row of brown knobs spaced to correspond with the suckers of the arms, by which they are apparently formed, and by which they cling to the shell.

The argonaut inserts herself within the shell, still holding to the outside with her embracing arms, and lays her eggs, suspending them in a grapelike cluster to the interior of the spire. She swims about at the surface of the sea, nearly submerged.

"Midget Plane" for Average Man May Soon Be Realized

Bureau of Air Commerce Approves Four Models

Washington.—Planes for the average man that will have the maximum of safety and performance and yet stay within the bounds of reason as to cost have now been approved by the bureau of air commerce at the end of its two years' development work.

Four airplanes are now on the approved list of the BAC in its program of seeking a plane which would do for aviation what the old model T Ford did for motoring.

Strangest looking of all approved types is the Waterman tailless airplane, still in the development stage, which is a distinct departure from conventional types

Its major advantage is simplicity of construction — a highly desirable factor—since ultimate low cost can only be achieved by mass production. Construction simplicity and mass production go hand in hand.

Types Approved.

First approved plane was the Hammond, which, like the Waterman, is of the pusher type, with its motor in the rear and having excellent pilot visibility. The landing gear is of the newer type, with a wheel in the nose and the other two just behind the center of gravity of the plane. The hazard of ground looping is practically eliminated in a landing gear of this type

"Guinea pig' of the development was the third plane — the Weick W-1 — which was produced at the great laboratories of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics at Langley Field, Va., under the direction of Mr. Fred Weick of the engineering staff. It is a personal project of Mr. Weick, and was begun before the bureau of air commerce program was inaugurated. This was the first plane using the nose landing wheel and rudderless control.

All-Metal Plane.

Fourth plane accepted by the bureau of air commerce is the Curtiss-Wright coupe, which, of all the planes, is the only one which follows what are usually considered conventional lines. It has all-metal construction previously found only in the larger transport planes and was purchased by the BAC for studies on the benefits of all-metal types for the private flyer.

Other planes will be purchased and delivered to the bureau of air commerce.

Lights on Street Delay Falling of Autumn Leaves

New York.—If you have a street light and a shade tree close together, in front of your house, watch the leaves on the branches nearest the lamp, when the tree begins to lose its foliage this fall.

The chances are that the branches getting the most light will keep their leaves longest.

Observations on the behavior of night-lighted street trees have been made here by Dr. Edwin B. Matzke of Columbia university.

He reports the retention of leaves by the most strongly illuminated branches, considerably past the date of leaf-fall from the rest of the tree.

How Light Affects Leaves.

His studies were made on Carolina poplar, two species of sycamore, and the crack willow — all trees able to survive the somewhat unfavorable conditions of New York city streets.

The poplar eventually lost all of its leaves in the normal way, but the leaves of the two sycamore species clung fast to the tree until they were frozen to death.

Evidence for Goth Migration Is Found

Vienna.—A weapon depot of the Goths has been discovered on the Danube river near here which is one of the first tangible traces of the famous Goth migration through Europe which, hitherto, has been known mainly from historical writings.

Particular interest is due to a two-edged iron sword about three feet in length, with amber pommel, the wooden handle covered with silver lead and the sheath adorned with a transversally grooved silver band.

Army of Criminals Is Greatest Menace Facing America

Nation Is Most Lawless in Entire World

AGAINST what enemy will Uncle Sam wage his next war? The nation's chief danger, according to Sociologist Rowland C Sheldon, is not from Red Russia or Nazi Germany, or Oriental Japan. It is from the army of criminals now walking armed through the streets of American cities and rural communities.

The National Crime Prevention institute, of which Mr. Sheldon (already identified with the Big Brother movement) is executive director, is now mobilizing the forces of public spirited men against this domestic "menace"

Anti-Crime Crusade.

"Since a military leader must deal with raw recruits first in marshalling his force, so is the National Crime Prevention institute setting out to establish the principles of obedience to law practically with the baby in its crib, the child in kindergarten, in schools, on into adolescent and adult life."

Crime may be looked upon as a social disease with a terrible toll of waste of human life and hopes. As such, it should be attacked by the methods of preventive medicine, just as the forces of the U. S. Public Health service and local health boards have battled against such physical diseases as smallpox, diphtheria, or typhoid fever. Education and helpful social influences should inoculate the child against the poisons of criminal environment

Crime Is Controllable.

The part that the police department may play in such a program of public welfare is visioned by Walter M Germain, inspector of police at Saginaw, Mich., and member of the board of directors of the National Crime Prevention institute. In a statement just made public by Mr Sheldon, Inspector Germain said

"It has been proven that crime is just as amenable to human control as disease The criminal ranks are largely recruited from among young boys The criminal is made during his formative years, when he is being subjected to deleterious influences of neighborhood environment, when he is getting into difficulties at home and in school, while he is becoming a problem child."

Drouths of 18th Century Traced in Rings of Trees

Hanover, N. H.—Drouths that troubled farmers half a century before the Revolutionary war have left their records clearly written in the rings of New England trees, Prof. Charles J. Lyon of Dartmouth college has found.

A tree ring represents the amount of wood grown in a given season. In a good year it is thick, in a drouthy or otherwise bad year it is thin. Long-past alternations of good and bad years have been read successfully in other parts of the United States, particularly the Southwest, but hitherto the records from New England have been confused and contradictory.

"Making Sense" of Weather

By studying a larger number of tree stumps, in several different locations in New Hampshire and Vermont, Professor Lyon has at last been able to "make sense" out of early New England weather.

"Many years since 1600 are found to have been outstanding for the good moisture conditions available for plant growth," he states. "During the same three and a third centuries, about twice as many years are marked by actual physiological drouth which retarded plant growth throughout the entire area Cyclic effects are not evident."

Mental Disease Strikes All Equally, Test Shows

Albany, N. Y.—Foreign-born persons in New York state are no more subject to mental disease than are native Americans, if allowance is made for difference in age and environment, reports Dr. Benjamin Malzberg, of the New York State Department of Mental Hygiene, in the American Journal of Psychiatry.

Although the average annual rates of first admissions to mental hospitals seem to indicate that the cases of mental disease among foreign-born are twice as numerous as among native Americans, these figures are misleading, Dr. Malzberg declares. The foreign-born are older, on the average, than the natives and consequently have had more chance to develop mental disease. They are also more concentrated in cities, where mental disease, or at least hospitalization for it, is more common.

Old Men Still Useful
Fists and Razor Blades
Youngest Grandfather
Science Works Two Ways

Even in this day of flaming youth, mature age still has its usefulness.

Arthur Brisbane

The average age of our Supreme Court justices is seventy-one years Twenty-six years ago Chief Justice Hughes took his seat on the Supreme Court bench President Taft rendered public service by appointing him to succeed Justice Brewer

He left the bench to run for President against Woodrow Wilson, and would doubtless have been elected had he not gone to California Had he been elected he would have remained in the United States and probably would have saved the country ten thousand million dollars that Woodrow Wilson shoveled out in his ecstasy of self-approval.

Rioting in London's "Mile End Road," in which the faces of men and women were slashed with razor blades and one man was thrown through a shop window, etc., seems rather "un-English," to put it mildly Fist fighting has been encouraged by distinguished Englishmen, including judges, on the ground that it is "better than using knives"

It is better, doubtless, but what about the razor blades?

Germany honors its youngest grandfather, Herman Jahnke, farm laborer, thirty-six years old. Married at seventeen, his eldest daughter became a mother at seventeen

If all you want is children, that record is satisfactory, although any mouse family could beat it by 25,000 per cent, and almost any microbe by a billion per cent.

If good children were desired, it would have been better for Mr. Jahnke to have his first child at 36, and his first grandchild at 60 or 70, at least that was Plato's opinion

Justice uses science—the electric chair, the lethal chamber—to punish criminals The criminal uses science to carry on his trade An SOS signal, purporting to come from a yacht in distress, drew the coast guard away from the coast of Hawaii, making it convenient for smugglers of narcotics to bring in their cargo. Tear gas, comparatively modern, was used to empty a New York theater where there was labor trouble.

Japan, until recently convinced, mistakenly, that this country is her enemy, and for excellent reasons keeping close watch on Russia and her anti-Japanese Vladivostok airplane and submarine base, now turns suspicious attention on dear old John Bull.

Britain is supposed to have asked nine nations to protest against Japan's demands on China. That should not worry Japan too much. The same old John Bull got fifty-one nations to protest Mussolini's attack on Ethiopia, but, paying no attention, the able Italian went ahead swallowing Ethiopia; sending the little Haile Selassie to live in Switzerland.

In his villa at San Remo, the Duke of Borea D'Olmo celebrates his one hundred and sixth birthday in excellent health. He has been active in Italian court circles since 1841 before the beginning of the United States-Mexican war.

Mussolini tells 200 farmers and industrialists to prepare for a "decisive conflict" that will be necessary "to preserve order against anarchy."

Those that favor the "present civilization," he said, will have to preserve it. "We are at the dawn of a decisive conflict between the representatives of order and anarchy."

Dr. Irving Langmuir, brilliant Nobel prize winner, announced a "counterpart of life," produced chemically; interesting, probably not important. Until some professor can produce "some counterpart of life" able to think, manufacture telescopes, explore the universe and run for office, man's domination will not be threatened. A cigar store Indian is a "counterpart," but not an Indian.

European nations are preparing to recognize the Spanish rebels when they take Madrid and set up a national government.

The idea is to take prompt action and forestall the victorious insurgents' giving Spanish territory to Italy or Germany; the Balearic islands to Italy for instance, to use as naval and air bases, with Ceuta for Germany. This would upset the balance of power in the western Mediteranean and disturb old England, with Egypt and the Suez Canal on her mind.

Puttering Around the House—

Time-Wasting Work of Putting Away Things Others Have Used

WHEN a family is orderly, no one has to do much puttering about When the members are not particular where they put their things, it becomes the undesirable duty of some person to spend much time in just this very thing, puttering Hours are wasted daily in such trivialities as gathering up newspapers spread about, picking up and putting away gloves, hats, scissors, thimbles, pencils, etc Whatever it may be that has been in use, and not put away by the user, or has been put in the wrong place, must be placed where it belongs or the house would reflect poor housekeeping.

Nondescript Tasks.

The time given to these nondescript jobs should be given by those who leave the work to others Putting things away is part of the job connected with using the things, just as much as getting the things out, is part of it. The work is regular and legitimate and only becomes an annoyance when left for the wrong person to do

No person wants her time frittered away doing the left-over jobs of others. Nobody enjoys having a person puttering around, either. It is distracting to attention, and disturbing to the nerves. From both the angle of the person who putters about and those who have to endure the annoyance of such activity, there should be some remedy found.

Remedies Suggested.

Mothers can teach their children to put their playthings away when through with them This is the first step to take Then she can instruct the little folk to put their outside things away when they come in from outdoors. Children can get into the habit of orderliness by being made to realize that what they don't do, has to be done by mother who is very busy and often too tired to do the extra tasks. Affection will gain the day.

Breaking the Habit.

Adults should consider how to break themselves of the reprehensible habit of leaving work they should do, to be completed by others. If they really determine to stop this bothersome fault, they will decrease the necessity of puttering about by the person who heartily dislikes the work, but who, for the sake of order prefers to do it rather than have disorder around.

A True Neighbor

OF ALL the best talents, that of belonging, of being a true member of the community, is the greatest, and for many in our large cities, the least expressed To be a true neighbor, citizen, patriot—to take on the state, so that what it does you do; to have the state within you, so that all that wounds public life hurts you—is to recover the top root of existence, to lay hold of the most vital of all the strands of life.—Joseph Lee.

At the age of seven he moved with his parents to Lake township where he completed his common school education He then attended Mason City High School

He was forced to discontinue his school work after one year be- cause of sickness His trouble was arthritis, a most stubborn form of rheumatism It settled first in his right elbow, and then, in spite of every help from local doctors and treatment at Iowa City, it spread to most all the joints of his body, making the boy nearly helpless, and for the past eight years was bedfast.

His parents and his brothers and sisters were very kind to him through this long illness, and he was a lad who appreciated every kindness which was done for him He never complained and was al ways bright and cheerful

Some weeks ago his heart be- came irregular and the end came Tuesday evening, Oct 27th, 1936 He reached the age of 23 years and 16 days

We've Pulled In Our Horns!

LET'S GET INTO THE HARNESS WITH PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT!

The battle is over The New Deal made a de- cisive sweep from north to south and from coast to coast to name Franklin Delano Roosevelt as President of the United States for another four years Along with the landslide the New Deal placed new men in Congress and many states, Iowa among them, swung into line with New Deal State Tickets

The mud slinging is over and party differences should now be forgotten laid aside and every Amer- ican citizen should get into the harness Mr Roosevelt is again the President and every loyal American citi- zen should give him full co-operation in the task that lies before him

The Klemme Times supported the Republican party during the campaign just closed Our efforts met with a most decisive defeat as far as the state and national ticket was concerned We admit that we must have been on the "wrong side of the fence" We, who style ourselves "Republicans" are a lot like a certain soldier in the army, who looked down the line of marching soldiers and said "Everybody is out of step but me" Thirty millions of voters cannot be wrong!

We believe that the New Deal victory four years ago and the landslide Tuesday is a good indication that there is no such thing as a Republican party, or a Democratic party Rather, we believe the New Deal is a combination of the two parties There evi- dently remains but a handful of old time stand-pat Republicans and a few staunch Democrats the latter styling themselves "Jeffersonian Democrats" Nei- ther of the above remnants of the old party have power enough to swing an election That we think is the reason for Landon's decisive defeat

The voters who have thrown their forces togeth- er a combination of Republicans and Democrats to elect Roosevelt for the second time are of the Pro- gressive type No doubt that will be the party in the future Then to oppose this party we will have ano- ther party the Conservative party The latter will be made up of the old stand-pat Republicans and the Jeffersonian Democrats

The New Deal or the Progressive is the party now in power with President Roosevelt as the leader So it's time to forget old party lines and everyone work together for the good of the country

Many Republicans hate to admit it, but there is no doubt that Roosevelt has accomplished many good things during the past three and a half years Mis- takes have been made, but it has been during a time when mistakes were easy to make We have every reason to think that the country will prosper during the next four years to come There has been a sure but steady comeback from the depression There is no logical reason why progress should be slowed down The nation is backing up the President and with a united effort we can expect prosperity

So, hats off to President Roosevelt!!

—The Editor.

Spanish Rebels Seem to Be Due to Win

Communist, Fascist Ideals Are Filmy to Illiterate General Populace; They're Concerned Only With Delivery From Oppression.

By WILLIAM C. UTLEY

AS THIS is being written, the army of the Fascist revolutionists is closing in on Madrid, less than 20 miles from the outskirts of the Spanish capital.

Thousands upon thousands on both sides have lost their lives on the firing line, have been executed like so many cattle, or have perished from starvation in times of siege. Atrocities have been committed upon religious, educational and civilian institutions which have rocked the civilized world.

All this has been happening in the name of philosophies of government which have begun to assume importance in the world only in the last decade or two. The Loyalist government supporters, headed by their new premier, Francesco Largo Caballero, are nominally Marxists and Communists. The insurgents under General Franco are Fascists.

But the Spanish people are emotionalists. Most of them have not the faintest idea what these theories of government mean, and care less. A Loyalist accepts his classification as a Communist because he believes that if his government is successful, he will be delivered from the penury and oppression which has been his lot. An insurgent accepts his classification as a Fascist for the same reason, or to keep himself from getting shot as a Communist at the hands of the rebels who seem destined to emerge as victors in the civil war.

The March on Toledo by General Franco's Insurgent Army.

Half Nation Illiterate.

Not that General Franco's army does not have plenty of work ahead of it before it can really claim Spain. There are important cities which have not yet fallen. After Madrid there are Barcelona, Bilbao and Valencia. Barcelona, a city of a million souls, has virtually shelved all other industry in the zeal to produce bullets, airplanes and other implements of war. If Caballero should find a way of combining the Loyalist strength that lies principally in these large cities, his government might hold out for some time.

But if the premier succeeds in binding his legions together in a solid front, it will not be by links of Marxist or Communist argument. Half the citizens of the country can neither read nor write. They are elemental, emotional. Their civilization has lagged behind. Literature has in a few years slipped back over centuries of what progress it may have once claimed.

There are thousands upon thousands of Spanish villages which are not accessible by road, which have no water supply. Half of the population makes its living directly from the land, by the crudest of methods. Average earnings are hardly more than enough to buy the poorest kind of food. Generation after generation, they have grown up to the same kind of existence.

These are the kind of people who are doing the actual fighting in the civil war. Are they fighting for ideals of government? Most of them have no more idea of their physical location in the world's geography than they have of television.

Republican Reform Falls Short.

By the millions, these people have for generations slaved at backbreaking labor to the profit of rich landlords not even present on the properties, and not one whit interested in the welfare of the tillers of their fields. The republic assured them that the lands would be taken from the landlords and given to them, and they could have the profits.

When the republic was ushered in, it began some reforms on the land, but was unable to supply the peasants with the funds and equipment necessary to work the farms at a profit, and the situation was little improved. In fact in some cases peasants were driven to work in the city factories at starvation wages.

The coming of the revolution was actually welcomed by certain of the business men and industrial employers of Spain. For the old Republican regime had not been so hard upon the industrial workers as upon the small farmers. Instead, it was the worker who was to blame for strikes and riots, some of them without any justification. The Azana republic had actually persecuted many of the business men and industrial holding classes.

However, in Spain there has been no humanization of industry to the point reached in many other countries. Industrial hospitals, schools and other institutions, which have been developed by many American concerns for the benefit of their employees, are not to be found in Spain. Both worker and employer regarded each other merely as objects for exploitation.

Sign of the Fist.

While five years ago there was little or no hatred of class for class evident in Spain, the outbreak of the present trouble must have been a long time brewing. Today class feeling is so intense that, as one distinguished correspondent put it, "in many parts of Spain to wear a collar or a tie, or for a woman to wear a hat may be inviting a bullet."

Visible demonstration of this class hatred is the challenging Communist sign—the clenched fist. Even tiny children, carted about the streets in trucks, are taught to give the sign to the bystanders along the way. And if the latter do not return it, it may lead to serious consequences.

As I have said above, in the excitement and emotion of all this stir of class against class, reason and education have been subjugated to an alarming degree. Spanish literature production is at a standstill. The only good reading obtainable in the language is the old classics. This is taken by many as a sign of the increasing, rather than decreasing, illiteracy of the general public.

Under the present regime it became apparent that the army was soon to become only the strong arm of Communism, wielded unmercifully in revenge upon the upper classes. Officers of the regular army had been dismissed and snubbed. In 1932, Manuel Azana had retired some 18,000 officers on pay, only to take this pay away from thousands of them at a later date, because of his suspicion that they were to become involved in a Fascist revolt. That was the match that lighted the tinder.

Both Sides Lack Unity.

The Fascists—army officers and the capitalistic class — conducted their revolt under the leadership of a smart commander expertly competent to take advantage of the domestic weaknesses of the Nationalist enemy. His campaign has been slow but sure. His lack of speed has given many luke-warm Socialists, Communists and Anarchists among the supporters of the national government opportunity to quarrel among themselves.

Indeed in the lack of unity on both sides lies the only real hope of a compromise in the civil war. As a matter of fact it is extremely doubtful that the doctrines of either side that might emerge victorious would be beneficial to the nation. As long as either side is confident that it has enough unity and power to win—regardless of the cost in life and destruction—it is apparent that the fight will go on to the bitter end.

All Europe is aware of the extremely delicate situation that exists with relation to outside aid for either faction in the Spanish civil war. But General Franco, in a brilliant campaign, has now captured Badajoz, which virtually makes it impossible for the government at Madrid to receive aid over the Portuguese border. The capture of Irun closed an important point of entry for any help that might have been forthcoming over the French border. With the fall of San Sebastian, the Loyalists lost practically the entire Atlantic seaboard. And the insurgents also hold Morocco, the Balearic Isles and the Canary Isles.

Portugal Takes a Walk.

Premier Blum of France, with the aid of Great Britain, has succeeded in establishing an agreement among the major European powers not to interfere in any way in the Spanish incident, especially not to render assistance to either warring faction. Yet, it appears from all reports certain that somehow both Loyalists, and Insurgents have been receiving materials of war from some outside sources.

Russia aroused the alarm and the disapproval of the other nations when she openly charged that Germany, Italy and Portugal had been aiding the cause of General Franco, in direct violation of the treaty of non-intervention. Stalin made it clear that the Soviet would, if this outside aid to the insurgents continued, feel perfectly free to come to the assistance of the Communists of the national government in Madrid. The Russians gave names, dates and locations.

This resulted in a walkout on the meeting of the committee for non-intervention, by the Portuguese delegate, who declared that his country had been affronted.

The Italian ambassador, Signor Grandi, opened up counter-charges of the same nature against the Russians, also naming names and dates and locations said to be involved in the supply of war materials to the Madrid government by the Soviet. The Russians defended their acts on the premises that the ships which Grandi had named carried only cargoes of food, upon which there is no limitation. Germany denied that she had any part in giving aid to either side.

Investigation Will Be Slow.

It seems probable now that the committee will demand investigation of the Russian charges. The move is led by Lord Plymouth of Great Britain, whose government is vitally interested in checking the course of any international disagreements over the Spanish case, which, it holds, is entirely local to that country, and need not draw all of Europe into another mortal conflict.

These Two Women and a Man Lived Through the Terrible Siege of the Alcazar at Toledo.

Britain has another interest. Madrid charges that the forces which captured the island of Ivizia in the Balearic group were composed primarily of Italians. Britain would certainly not be pleased with the prospect of Benito Mussolini coming into power in such a location.

France has decided to back up Britain in its demands of an investigation. The irony of it all is that any investigation which takes place will probably be so long drawn out that General Franco will have won the war before it is completed.

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted
By WILLIAM BRUCKART
NATIONAL PRESS BLDG. WASHINGTON, D. C.

Washington — During the recent bitter campaigning, both national political parties engaged in a good deal of palaver about the coal industry. As usual, the politicians were patting the miners on the back, telling them what wonderful assets to the nation they are, and carrying their demagoguery further by criticism of the mine owners every now and then because it was popular with labor to attack employers. Altogether, it was a rather sorry spectacle and, I think, did not do credit to either side to any extent.

The Coal Industry

But in this report, I want to stress a very much less obvious phase of the problem than was made apparent in any of the electioneering. With all of the verbiage cast aside, with all of the political hoodwinking forgotten, there is a very deep and difficult problem in the coal industry. I think it can be summarized in one question: What is the future of coal, the coal industry, and the thousands of men who know no other source of livelihood than that which they eke out in the bowels of the earth?

This question, if proper analysis is made, encompasses more than the usual factors that operate in economics. It does that because of policies of the federal government, among states and among municipalities. Because of the attempts to influence votes, the whole question has got into politics and that of itself is ruinous, an obstacle to a scientific solution.

Not so many years ago coal mine owners and coal labor units had what amounted to a monopoly on our fuel supply. Then came oil, oil with all of the scientific development that followed in its wake. Despite this, operators and labor leaders continued to take their toll from the hapless user of coal for fuel, be that user a great factory or an individual consumer in furnace or round oak stove. But that was not all. Electricity came along with its constantly increasing automatic control. First, of course, in the larger communities and later it came to villages and farm homes. Still, the mine owners and the coal labor leaders followed an unwise course still, they continued to take their toll and before they fully realized what the circumstance was, they had succeeded by their acts in building up a desire on the part of millions of people to use some other sort of fuel. The end is not yet, and that is why the subject is most important at this stage of our history.

During the Roosevelt administration we have seen an impetus given to public ownership of power plants never equalled. I think much of this development has gone on in a hit-and-miss fashion and that eventually the public will pay for the shiftless methods employed in development, but that is beside the point. The present question is whether our nation is going to continue to expand public ownership in such a way as to ruin an industry that is as much a part of our basic economic structure as any other unit of our natural life. I think sometimes it goes beyond that for the reason that, unless people awaken to the fact that they are being hoodwinked to a considerable extent by public ownership propaganda, it is likely to spread and public ownership will become a frankenstein, a parasite on our body public.

Public Ownership

When I referred to the destruction of a great industry, I had in mind the thought that the consequences will run in two directions. Yet, paradoxically as it may seem, they constitute a cycle. It works out like this: As the demand for coal declines, it is quite natural that production costs go up. When production costs go up, they eventually reach the point where a further diminution occurs in demand. When that decline in demand occurs, there is only one answer: Labor is thrown out of work because you cannot produce and have those products piled high in storage. It takes money to keep labor and machinery occupied. The coal itself, after being removed from the mines, represents money and it is subject as well to deterioration. So, the ultimate to be expected on this side of the picture is an industry dying of dry rot.

On the other side of the problem is an equally important factor at work. It takes an immense amount of capital, massed in corporate form, to maintain a going concern whether that concern be coal mining, railroading or any other of our great industries. These industries operate largely on funds obtained through the sale of stocks and bonds of the corporation. But it has always been true, and human nature shows no signs of changing, that capital is not attracted to, it does not seek investment in, a declining industry. There you have a possibility at least of insufficient funds to carry through for the coal mining industry until it can readjust itself to the new place it must occupy in our economic structure. It will occupy a new place because it will readjust itself, but it has not done so yet and the consequence of this condition is, in my opinion, coal mine labor is due for some very hard sledding in the next decade, notwithstanding the honeyed words of the politicians.

Now, to turn to the part that government plays in bringing about present conditions I have attempted to show how greed on the part of both capital and labor was responsible in a measure for building up what amounts to ill-will among many coal consumers. But the industry itself is not wholly responsible. Indeed, I rather hold the opinion that government is as much responsible for conditions as the industry itself, and when I say government, I must limit my reference to political demagogues. They always have been shortsighted and they are still shortsighted. They have been and they are now willing to sacrifice great masses of men and money for personal political gain of an entirely transitory character.

Blame Demagogues

I have said before in these columns that the country is being sadly kidded—it is almost tragic—by the wonders of such parasitic organizations as TVA. The public ownership crowd have had a willing leader in President Roosevelt and his hangers-on have promoted his policies of public ownership without being honest as to the ultimate goal, or the eventual effect.

It is not alone that there have been millions wasted in the development of the Tennessee valley electrical mirage. It is not so much that taxpayers throughout the country will be paying a bill and paying it over and over again, that causes me to complain. It is not so much that the Tennessee Valley Authority will never be economically operated or become self-sustaining that brings this outburst. It is the fact that when a government, national, state or local, leads the way in this direction, it wields an influence upon a certain percentage of our population. Since public ownership advocates, in many instances, plain socialism, where in control of these agencies such as TVA, it is perfectly natural that they present to the taxpayers only the most rosy side of the story. They do not disclose to the taxpayers the adverse, the costly side, of the situation. Naturally then, hundreds of thousands of people believe that government can do this sort of thing better than private enterprise. They become convinced that private initiative has been turned into a spigot through which individual pocketbooks are drained. They do not realize that their pocketbooks are being drained much more heavily through public ownership by means of the taxes they take from you and me and everyone else. That is the sad story, made worse by the fact that through nearly four years the Washington government has been encouraging people to believe public ownership propaganda and distrust and destroy private investment.

Recent Treasury figures show that the Resettlement Administration has paid approximately $27,750,000 of its total appropriation of $134,518,000 for administrative expenses. That is, the organization which is the pride and joy of Professor Rexford Guy Tugwell has paid that amount of money to job holders in trying to carry out the professor's impossible dream.

Expensive Dream

While the sum shown as used for administrative expenses by Professor Tugwell is small, compared to the billions of total waste in the Roosevelt administration, the proper way to consider this circumstance is on a percentage basis. If you take your pencil you can calculate that about 20 per cent or one-fifth of all the funds appropriated to Professor Tugwell for resettlement, has been used in management of his plan. It may be a fraction under 20 per cent, but it is so close that even the fastidious Mr. Tugwell would not quarrel about the difference.

One-fifth of an appropriation that is designed theoretically at least to serve for relief purposes is entirely too much. It is not as great perhaps as has happened with one or two other relief appropriations, but it has always been claimed that the Tugwell scheme was planned to reestablish those who have been resettled on a permanent basis. That is to say, it was planned that the bulk of the money should be used in providing those people with a fresh start in life, but I cannot see where they are getting the full measure of help intended if a lot of job holders sit around in Washington offices or in offices in various states using up one-fifth of the total layout of cash.

NOW IS THE TIME

Now is the time to think about the feeding and protection of birds next winter. Remember what happened last winter? Every person interested in the welfare of Iowa's game should seek out places where game birds are concentrating and provide protective shelters and arrange for food and a continuous and consistent feeding schedule for the entire winter

If you know of any waste grain screenings or any food suitable for wildlife, notify your local Conservation Officer, sportsman's organization or the Conservation Commission at Des Moines. Perhaps you can make arrangements with the farmer's boy on the farm where you hunt to feed the game consistently throughout the winter

This winter it will be important for the birds to have all the attention possible, for the drought of the past summer has reduced natural foods to the minimum, including farm crops The arrangements you make now spell the answer to future hunting seasons in Iowa It is everybody's job

COUNTY FARM PROGRAM INCLUDES ALL PHASES OF RURAL ACTIVITIES

Boys and girls' 4-H club activities, home project work and numerous agricultural projects including agricultural economics, rural electrification township and community activities, are included in the Hancock County Farm Bureau program for 1937, T C Petersen, county agent has announced

The educational program was outlined by a committee representing the Farm Bureau Other farm organizations, public officials, teachers, members of the Agricultural conservation committee, the county agricultural planning committee and various interested groups were consulted by the committee prior to planning the program

Commenting on the activities of next year Mr Petersen emphasized the fact that soil conservation is one of the county's major prolems and probably will continue to be so for many years Recommendations of the county agricultural planning committee which were made last spring were considered in drawing up the 1937 educational program

The agricultural planning committee was organized a year ago to work on a long time policy of land use for Hancock county This report and similar ones from other counties are being used by the United States Department of Agriculture in developing a land use policy for the entire country In brief, the local committee's recommendations called for shifting some of the corn acreage to small grain, decreasing total grain acreage and increasing such soil building crops as alfalfa and clovers.

In the 1937 educational program, sponsored by the Farm Bureau and conducted in cooperation with the Extension Service of Iowa State College are included projects on Soil Management, Small grain and flax improvement, Corn improvement, Pasture improvement and Fruit Growing

The program also provides for cooperation in the 1937 agricultural conservation program of AAA

ELECTRICAL PROGRESS ,

Significant evidence of progress is seen in the new ideas and improved equipment whch have been applied to power stations, whereby the cost of generating electricity by steam plants has been brought below four mills per kilowatt hour in some instances with even greater economies promised for the near future

The increased efficiency of steam plants will have a most important bearing upon the future value of waterpower projects, because only those power dams which are most advantageously located will be able to produce electricity at a cost less than that of generation by steam

What the total electrical output will be in another ten years must be left largely to the imagination Electrification of farms and railroads is in its infancy, but is going forward rapidly New electrical appliances for every conceivable means of utility, comfort and entertainment are being developed with remarkable rapidity In fact, we are just beginning to get some slight idea of what electricity will mean to civilization in the future.

"Hello, Smith, old man; haven't seen you for a long time."

Scientists estimate that the earth has been a solid mass 1,800,000,000 years. It is also estimated that the earth previous to this existed as a ball of gas and flame for 70,000,000 years.

TRAPPERS PREPARE

Trappers are busy cleaning traps and arranging for locations to set traps with season officially opening on November 10

Trappers are reminded that the placing of traps prior to 12 01 A M of the opening date is unlawful. It has been thought by some that traps could be placed the night before the season opens. If proper arrangements have been made with the landowner prior to the open season, there should be no reason to try to "beat" the other fellow to the best places

When it comes to the widely used children's remedy — "milk of magnesia," the standard of the world is established. For over half a century many doctors have said "PHILLIPS' Milk of Magnesia." Safe for children. No other is "quite like it."

"Lie Detector" May Explore Minds of Mental Patients

Unconscious Emotions May Be Discovered

HANOVER, N. H. — A new technique for detecting emotion through measurement of electric resistance of the skin was reported to the American Psychological association here

Possible use of this new test in exploring the unconscious minds of the mentally ill was suggested by the results of experiments reported by Dr. T. W Forbes, of the New York State Psychiatric institute and hospital

Sometimes known as the "lie detector," the psychogalvanometer — used to record the physical changes that occur when a person is questioned about his guilt or when his emotions are aroused in any other way — has previously been incorrectly used, Dr. Forbes indicated. The electrodes have customarily been applied to two separate skin areas By reading potentials from just a single skin area, Dr Forbes found not one but two waves which were confused or masked in the readings from two areas

Reading the Waves.

One wave is negative and the other positive, and both occur with great regularity in most individuals. The "a," or negative, wave showed little variation in amplitude and occurred whether the subject was excited or not.

The positive "b" wave, on the other hand, occurred with increased magnitude whenever the subject was excited.

This was true whether the "exciting" situation involved electric shock, the startle of a revolver shot, or words designed to be embarrassing.

The "lie detector" technique would not be equally effective on all individuals for the purpose of detecting their emotional responses, Dr. Forbes' experiments indicated. Some individuals, he reported, failed to show any change of the "b" wave except with very intense startle.

Eskimo Mummies of Alaska Shed Light on Ancient North

WASHINGTON. — Discovery of important mummy caves, where prehistoric people of the North hid away their dead, is a signal achievement of the Smithsonian institution's expedition to Alaska, just returned.

Dr. Ales Hrdlicka, leader of the anthropological expedition, and his four associates braved fog hazards and rocky barriers to explore two caves which they believed would contain bundled mummies of Alaska's early Aleutian Islanders.

These caves are no more than crevices in rocky mazes of the Aleutian islands, Dr. Hrdlicka explained. A first attempt to reach one cave failed due to heavy fog that shut out the island and the two great volcanoes nearby.

Find Ancient People.

With the aid of the Coast guard, the party returned and, finding that here were indeed buried many ancient people, both adults and children, they began to work fast as they could to remove mummy bundles from the confusion of fallen rock and debris. Foxes in the cave tomb had added to the damage of time.

"We worked with our hands," said Dr. Hrdlicka. "Tools were of no use. We had not time to think of resting or eating, for if fog settled down we would be marooned, perhaps for days."

By afternoon, the sea was running to a considerable swell, and the workers made haste to get away. All material collected had to be passed by relay in sacks from one man to another for three-quarters of a mile to the beach where the boat was waiting.

Your Eye Can See One Millionth of an Inch

WASHINGTON. — The next time you see a film of oil on a rain puddle in the pavement look for the colored light fringes.

Pretty. Yes But, more important, they indicate that your eye can detect a difference of one-millionth of an inch. That is the thickness of the oil films which produce those colors by interference. The beautiful coloring of some butterfly wings is a similar phenomenon of thin films. The best micrometer gauges now in use will detect differences of only one-ten-thousandth of an inch.

Fossil Remains of Man's "Great Uncle" Found in Africa

Ape Bones Date Back to Beginning of Ice Age

FRAGMENTS of bone from a South African cave, described in the British science journal, Nature, by Dr. R. Broom of the Transvaal museum, may prove to be some of the most significant fossils thus far turned up by science in its long search for facts bearing on the natural origin of man.

For sketches of these bits of bone, sent by their discoverer to Dr William K. Gregory of the American Museum of Natural History, "suggest the right characters for the adult of Australopithecus or a nearly allied form"

Australopithecus, or "the Ape of the South," was first found in 1925 at Taungs in Bechuanaland, by Prof. Raymond A Dart of the Witwatersrand university, Johannesburg The two fossils then discovered, a braincast and part of the bones of the face, were definitely those of an ape, but of an ape with more man-like characters than any previously known subhuman species, living or fossil Australopithecus was apparently a real missing link.

Comparisons Possible.

Professor Dart's specimens were those of a young specimen, just cutting its first permanent molar teeth. It was therefore of less value scientifically than an adult specimen might have been, because young apes and human children are always more alike than the adult forms become

By an especial stroke of good fortune, the newly discovered material described by Doctor Broom also includes a brain cast, so that a direct comparison with the juvenile brain cast of the earlier find can be made, and comparisons with the brains of human beings and the brains of apes will also be possible

With this very important cast were also parts of the skull base and a fragment of the upper jaw.

The age of the formation in which the fossils were found may be pliocene, that is, the time just before the beginning of the world's latest great Ice age, more than a million years ago Since man's ancestry had already been well separated from the ape stock by the late pliocene at least it is not considered probable that Australopithecus was a direct ancestor. He must be looked upon as a collateral relative—a great-uncle rather than a grandfather.

Bigger Sized Brain Needed to Improve Man's Behavior

CAMBRIDGE, MASS. — If man's life is ever to be lived along entirely rational lines, free from such disturbances as war, crime, and economic booms and depressions, he will have to find a way of increasing the size of his brain

This is the conclusion to be drawn from what Prof. Edgar Douglas Adrian of Cambridge university, English Nobel laureate and one of the pioneers in "brain wave" investigations, told scientists at the Harvard Tercentenary celebration here of the relation between the nervous system and human behavior.

Scientific delvings into the mechanism of the mind and body, by "brain waves" and other techniques, show that the only certain method by which human behavior can be improved is the apparently impossible feat of breeding men with large brains.

Superhuman Behavior.

"It is tantalizing," Professor Adrian said, "to think of the new relations we should see, of the new world of thought we should live in, if four brains were but twice their present size. Our behavior would then be superhuman!"

Not even the most fanciful mind, given to picturing a race of supermen in a world to come, could conceive of the result, which Professor Adrian described as "beyond the power of human thought."

There's Life in the Dead Sea, After All

JERUSALEM.—Living organisms have been found in Dead Sea water, which has always been supposed to be utterly devoid of life of any kind because of its exceedingly high concentration of salt, potash, and other mineral matter. The discovery was made by Dr. B. Wilkansky of the Hebrew university of Jerusalem.

Doctor Wilkansky collected samples of water in the Dead sea, at various depths to 22 feet. After suitable laboratory preparation, three microscopic forms of life were found: one consisting of yeast-like cells, one of short, rod-like cells, and the third in the shape of long, fine threads.

Tales and Traditions from American Political History

BY FRANK E. HAGEN AND ELMO SCOTT WATSON

AN EARLY "BLACK LEGION"

ON TREES were posted mysterious squares of paper, black, or white or red, summoning men to midnight meetings At these meetings there were oaths and grips and pass-words

That was more than three-quarters of a century ago, but members of the "Black Legion," who created such a furore early in 1936, would have felt pretty much at home in those meetings back in the forties and fifties. There they would have fraternized with members of "The Supreme Order of the Star-Spangled Banner," a secret society which grew into a political party, the Native Americans, with a platform of opposition to foreigners, the papacy, infidelity and socialism

Later they became known as the Know Nothings because, when a member was questioned about the order he invariably answered "I don't know" In New York and Pennsylvania they elected several men to congress and in 1847 they held a national convention at Philadelphia There they nominated Gen Henry Dearborn for vice-president and recommended, but did not formally nominate, Gen. Zachary Taylor, the Whig candidate for President

In 1854-55 the Know Nothings carried Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island, New Hampshire, Kentucky and California and looked forward to the election of 1856 with high hopes Soon the party threw off its secret character and it became apparent that they were mostly Whigs In February they held another convention in Philadelphia at which they formally renamed their party the American party They nominated for President Millard Fillmore, the Whig vice-president who had served all but one month of the term to which Zachary Taylor had been elected, and gave him for a running mate Andrew Donelson of Tennessee, the ward of "Old Hickory" Jackson. Fillmore carried only one state in the election which sent James Buchanan, the Democratic candidate, to the White House and the Know Nothings passed out of the political picture soon afterwards.

"TO THE VICTORS——"

"TO THE victors belong the spoils!"

Although Andrew Jackson was the first exponent of that political creed, he was not the first man to express it in so many words. The man who did was William L. Marcy of New York, leader of one of the factions in the Democratic party when Polk was President.

The division in the Democratic ranks was over the distribution of federal patronage and it centered, as it has so often since, in New York state The faction, led by Marcy, was called the "Hunkers" who were supported by Tammany and who were given that name because they were always inclined to hunger, or "hunker," for office.

The other faction, led by Silas Wright, was composed of disappointed Van Buremtes — disappointed because Van Buren, whom Jackson had made his successor, had been refused a second term by the party which took Polk, a "dark horse," instead This faction was called the Barnburners," because, like the Dutch farmer in New York state who burned his barn to get rid of the rats in it, they declared they were ready to "burn their barns to get rid of the rats," the upstart "Hunkers."

As a matter of fact they did just that in the campaign of 1848. Opposed to slavery they joined forces with the Liberty party, took the name of the Free Soil party and nominated Martin Van Buren and Charles Francis Adams of Massachusetts. This split in the Democratic party resulted in a victory for Gen. Zacnary Taylor, the Whig candidate, over Van Buren and over Lewis Cass, the regular Democratic nominee.

Along with "Hunker" and "Barnburner" is another interesting name once applied to the Democrats, growing out of the rivalry of these two factions. In the campaign of 1840 the Whigs called their opponents the "Locofocos" because at a meeting of the New York Democrats the two factions were trying to get control of the meeting. One gang turned off the gas lights and in the darkness, the other gang, which had come prepared for just such a stunt, took from their pockets the new friction matches, called "locofocos," struck them and by thus lighting the room were able to continue the session and dominate it.

New York City Milestones.

The first New York City milestones were erected in 1769, starting from the second City Hall at Wall and Nassau Streets and running along the Bowery Road to Kingsbridge. In 1801 a second series was set from the second City Hall to Middle Road The third series was erected in 1822 from the present City Hall along the Bowery and Third Avenue. All the stones were of uniform size, being sixty-six inches high, four inches wide and six inches thick.

The Bored Are Boring—

People of Outstanding Personality Are Interested, and Never Blase

"YOUNG people of today," a mother writes, "seem to regard it as a sign of immaturity or weakness to be thrilled with anything. Their idea of sophistication is to appear bored with everything, the having-done-all-seen-all attitude that finds it very difficult to be impressed with anything. It is most annoying to find that anything you can offer them for a good time seems to be inadequate, that the thrills of your own youth cannot be repeated for them It seems to me they miss a great deal."

I would point out to this mother, says a woman writer of international note, that naturally we cannot expect that the thrills of our youth will equally impress the young people of this day. So much that came to us gradually as colorful experiences are a part of their daily background. But there is something definitely true in what she says of a pose, of a deliberate care never to seem impressed, of a pretense at being bored

It may interest such young people to know that that supersophisticate, G. K. Chesterton, said "there are no bores, only people who are bored." In other words there can be nothing interesting about a person who is bored!

That takes us right down to a bedrock fact that can be observed if we will note people of outstanding personality, people whom everybody finds interesting. Without exception they will be people who are vitally interested They are never bored, never blase. They are able to give out what interests others, because through their interest in things and people about them they are constantly taking in. Their main charm is a certain aliveness, a vitality which has absolutely no relationship with being bored.

A Man in Trouble

No matter how uncouth a man may be, if his character is firm and he faces trouble like a man, your heart warms to him.

Cultured people are those who are informed on intellectual values; highbrows are those who are ostentatious of their information.

Give a newly met man a chance to show his good qualities before rejecting him as a friend.

Oft a man doesn't wish to be asked, "What do you want for dinner?" He likes to be surprised—agreeably, of course.

In youth, credulity is enormous, and skepticism is enormous; there is no middleground; and both are amusing.

Caste in India

India's caste system creates singular situations The Maharaja of Mysore, the multimillionaire prince who has reigned over India's second greatest state for the past 41 years, is lower in caste than his cook who, therefore, would suffer great humiliation if he were ever made to eat, drink or smoke with his employer-monarch.—Collier's Weekly.

FLOYD GIBBONS ADVENTURERS' CLUB

Hello Everybody

"Miracle on a Bridge"

By FLOYD GIBBONS

NOW it's a well known fact, boys and girls, that adventurers have adventures, but why is it nobody ever gives a thought to adventurers' wives? They have adventures too—particularly if they travel around with their husbands like Grace Stanley of Fairview, N. J.

Mrs. Stanley is the wife of the late Col. King Stanley, a traveler and adventurer of long standing. During the four years that she traveled with him, she says she had enough adventure to fill an encyclopedia. But the one that gave her the biggest thrill—and also the worst fright—happened down in the wild and woolly state of Texas in the spring of 1926.

Grace Stanley and the colonel were taking a trip by automobile from Texas to Shreveport, La. Just beyond Marshall, Texas, they ran into a severe storm—and when storms are severe down on the Texas plains, they're severe, and no mistake. This one was a combination of thunder, lightning, rain and hail The rain came down in sheets. There was no cover in sight, and nothing to do but go on.

They were getting close to the state line when the car came to a bridge spanning a deep cut through which ran the tracks of the K. C. and S. railroad. As they hit the end of that bridge, Grace heard a DEAFENING CRACK. A sudden flash of light almost blinded her. The car came to a sudden stop and the air was filled with a sulphurous smell. Lightning! Had it struck them? With her heart in her mouth, Grace raised her eyes.

There were three people in the car—her husband and the driver in the front seat and Grace herself in the rear. The men, up front, were all right. Grace breathed a sigh of relief. But at the same time something inside of her was telling her to sit still—not to move even so much as a single muscle. Without moving her head she turned her eyes to the right. The sight she saw there FROZE THE BLOOD in her veins.

The bolt of lightning had ripped away the entire corner of the bridge. The car was standing on three wheels, teetering precariously over a fifty-foot chasm, its fourth wheel—the left rear one—hanging FAR OUT OVER SPACE.

Then the Car Started to Sag.

The men in the front seat weren't moving, either. They sat stiff and motionless, with grim, set expressions on their faces. Then, slowly, the car began to sag to the right—toward the broken, twisted wrecked side of the bridge.

There wasn't any time to waste. Quickly they talked the matter over—decided the only thing that could save them was to shift as much weight as possible to the left side of the car. Grace, who was in the rear seat on the right side, directly over the dangling wheel, couldn't move because the seat beside her was filled with luggage. It was up to the driver and the colonel to do the shifting.

The car settled a bit more. Grace held her breath as she felt herself sinking. The driver opened the door, slid over in his seat and got out on the running board. Both he and the colonel were big men—both of them weighed in the neighborhood of two hundred pounds—and Grace found herself breathing a prayer of thankfulness for that. In an agony of suspense she watched while the driver got out and her husband slid over in the seat to take his place behind the wheel.

"All this time," says Grace, "the car kept on settling down toward the right. It was probably only a minute or two, but it seemed like a thousand years. I hugged as close to the baggage on the left as I could, but still the car settled. It looked as if we were going over in spite of all our efforts."

Saved by Truck Driver with a Rope.

The colonel, too, was climbing out on the running board now—shifting his weight as far to left as possible. Still the car sagged, and there was nothing more they could do. If they stepped from the running board the car would go over. If Grace tried to move, it might furnish just the vibration needed to send the car off the bridge and down to the tracks fifty feet blow. It was a heartbreaking situation. Death was staring her in the face, and nobody dared to do anything about it.

But at that same moment help was in sight. A small truck shot around a corner from the opposite direction, and the driver saw what had happened. He stepped on the gas and came speeding toward them.

Again, Grace was afraid to breathe. Would the vibration set up by the truck send them over the side?

But the driver of that truck had a lot of presence of mind. Also, he had a rope. He leaped from his seat with the rope in his hand, looped it around the front of the car and then made it fast to the far side of the bridge.

With the rope holding the car, Grace could get out. She and the colonel went around to the back of the automobile to join the truck driver, who was excitedly crying that nothing but a miracle had saved them. The fellow was right, too. The lightning had curled up the ironwork of the bridge like so much straw. One of the curls had ripped off both right tires and completely ruined one side of the car. Another curl had caught under the car itself—and that was the only thing that had kept them from going over.

Tobacco Proves State of Soil

If everyone stopped smoking there would still be a use for tobacco, says Tit-Bits Magazine. Some would continue to grow it because of its pale, fragrant flower, but it would be valued chiefly by horticulturists, who have discovered that it is a wonderfully sure indicator of the state of the soil. For successful cultivation it is necessary that the soil should contain nine constituents; a lack of one or more means sickly plants. But the tobacco plant is so sensitive that the absence of any of these is indicated immediately in the leaf. It is bright green if there is too little nitrogen, abnormally dark if phosphorus is absent, and the tips of the tiny leaves enclosing the buds curl curiously if there is too little calcium. Each reaction is so marked that it cannot possibly be mistaken.

"Behind the 8-Ball"

The National Billiard Association of America says: "It is generally conceded that the 8-ball is the most difficult for the player to see clearly in the execution of his shot. This, because it is black, naturally, the edges of the ball, or in fact any part of the ball, do not stand out as clearly as colored. Therefore, professional players, if possible, avoid being forced to play the 8-ball, because it is more difficult to see clearly. In reality, this fact was what started the now common saying, 'behind the 8-ball,' used in the player's vernacular in the sense that being in any kind of a difficult point on the table, many times calls for the remark that one is 'behind the 8-ball.' In other words, they use this to explain any difficult situation which may confront them in the game."

POULTRY

CANNING POULTRY FOUND FINE PLAN

Fat, Unprofitable Hen as Good as Young Bird.

Supplied by the Ohio State University Poultry Department.—WNU Service

Seasonal culling of the farm poultry flock gives homemakers a chance to provide some delicious future meals for the family by canning as many as possible of the fat hens which are no longer profitable as layers but which make the men folks smile when they are served in one of the many ways that canned chicken can be used.

Nutrition specialists say that the mature hens are as good or better after canning than younger birds. Chicken may be canned either in glass or tin cans, but a high temperature is required to sterilize the meat so a pressure cooker should be used.

Some authorities claim that the meat darkens if it has been prepared in sheet iron or copper utensils so it is just as well not to use such containers while canning. A stainless steel knife for cutting up the chicken avoids any possibility of the knife causing any discoloration.

Pint or quart jars should be used or No. 2 or 3 plain or C-enamel cans. The white meat can be cut from the breast but the rest of the meat is usually left on the bones. The chicken can be packed cold or it can be preheated by simmering in a pan, roasting in the oven, or browned in a frying pan. The pieces should be arranged in the cans so the skin side is next to sides of the can.

Chicken in which the bones are left should be processed at 15 pounds pressure for 65 minutes in pint jars, 75 minutes in quart jars, 55 minutes in No 2 cans, and 70 minutes in No. 3 cans Processing times for boned chicken are 85 minutes in pint jars, 120 minutes in quart jars, 85 minutes in No. 2 cans, and 120 minutes in No 3 cans.

Sodium Fluoride May Be Used as a Louse Killer

One excellent control method consists of dipping each bird for 20 to 30 seconds in a mixture of 5 ounces of commercial sodium fluoride in 5 gallons of warm water. Such a quantity should treat 100 birds. Sodium fluoride may be also applied as a dust, says the Indiana Farmer's Guide.

Perhaps the cheapest treatment of the roosts and nests consists of spraying infected quarters with a mixture of crude oil and kerosene The mixture, 1 part kerosene to 4 parts of crude oil, may be applied as a spray or with a brush, and will retain a killing power for several weeks. Crank - case drainings has proven equally as good when thinned in a similar way with kerosene. Whenever such oils are used, care should be taken to prevent the fowls from coming into contact with the oil.

Another remedy calls for a streak of nicotine sulphate, or Blackleaf 40, the width of a pencil lead spread on the perches about half an hour before the birds go to roost, followed by a second treatment 10 days later. The presence of lime on the roosts with such a treatment may cause death of the birds.

Birds for Market

Fowls may be prepared for market either by "dry picking" or scalding, the choice lying between the two in the facilities possessed by the one who prepares the birds for market and any difference in market prices. Dry picking requires sticking and bleeding in proper manner, while "scalding" will probably be easier for the novice. For limited numbers and a local market, the most satisfactory method may be removal of the bird's head and picking after immersing in water a little below the boiling temperature.

With the Poultrymen

Turkey pullets make better breeders than turkey hens.

Infectious bronchitis is one of the hardest conditions a poultry raiser is called to combat.

H. H. Alp, extension poultryman, University of Illinois College of Agriculture, says poor housing facilities stand out as one of the chief reasons for low winter egg production.

On the basis of data available the Agriculture department estimates that 400,000,000 hens now lay 90 eggs each annually.

Cod liver oil and yellow corn fed to North Carolina poultry flocks suffering from vitamin deficiency corrected the trouble.

Poultry records show that only about 15 per cent of the 1935 egg production was laid during the months of October, November and December when prices are good.

Store Root Crops and Make Profit

Simple, Well-Drained Field Location Needed; Do Not Dig a Trench.

By C. H Nissley, Professor of Vegetable Gardening, New Jersey State College
WNU Service

By storing such root crops as beets, turnips, parsnips and rutabagas in the field as soon as the weather becomes cold, many farmers are able to take advantage of a profitable market for these vegetables during winter.

The storage operation is simple, but a well-drained location is necessary. Do not dig a trench, but place the vegetables on the surface of the ground in rectangular piles with 25, 50, 75 or 100 bushels in each. The proper size of the pile depends upon the number of bushels to be taken out for sale at one time

After the roots have been neatly arranged in the pile, cover them with from four to eight inches of straw, salt hay or double layer of burlap. Then place a three- to five-inch layer of soil over the roots to prevent the wind from uncovering them. As the weather becomes colder, more protection will be needed to prevent the roots from freezing.

Ventilation must also be provided in order to allow moisture given off by the roots to escape The ventilator may be a roll of straw or hay placed on top of the mound, and some growers use a short stove pipe or a tile in both ends of the mound.

Cabbage, too, may be successfully stored in the field. Pull the plants up by the roots and place them on the ground upside down so that the roots extend upward From three to ten rows of cabbages may be placed in one trench.

In the three-row system, two heads are placed alongside each other with the heads of the third row between and above the other two rows. When storing six rows in one trench, place the cabbages in three rows together on the ground, two rows on top of these and a third row on top of the second layer, forming a pyramid. Then cover the cabbage with burlap or a thin layer of salt hay or straw and add soil as for storing root crops.

Last Drawn Milk Richer, Is Why Stripping Pays

Which is richer in butterfat, the first-drawn or the last-drawn milk from a cow? Or is there any difference?

Invariably, the last-drawn milk is considerably richer That is why it is so important to strip cows thoroughly at each milking Incomplete milking not only tends to damage the future production of the cow but it also is very unprofitable.

According to the dairy extension service at Iowa State college, convincing experiment along this line recently was conducted A sample was taken of the first milk, then of the strippings and finally of the total milk mixed together. The first milk showed a butter fat test of 0.27 per cent The strippings tested 6 per cent. The composite test for the entire milking was approximately 3 per cent

A cow tester for the Palo Alto testing association, reports that the average test of the last milk drawn from a number of cows in different herds was 9.2 per cent He points out that a half pound of such milk left in each cow at each milking would amount to 2 85 pounds of butterfat per month or about 57 pounds on a 20-cow herd — Wallaces' Farmer.

Outlook for Wool

Prospective world supplies of wool in 1936-37, including production and stocks, probably will be less than for several years, says the bureau of agricultural economics. World production outside of Russia and China is expected to be about the same as in 1935 when 3,278,000,000 pounds, smallest clip since 1929, was produced. Supply of wool available in United States in 1936 will be much smaller than last year due to small carry-over into current season, but it is probable that mill consumption will also be smaller than last year.

Cost of Keeping Horse

A horse at medium work will require about one pound of hay and one pound of grain for each 100 pounds body weight. On this basis if figured on a 365-day feeding basis for a 1,200-pound horse with no allowance for pasture would require about three tons of hay and two and one-half tons of grain, such as equal parts corn and oats. Some allowance is made for wastage for hay. With hay at $10 per ton and grain at $30 per ton the total year's feed cost would be $105.—Rural New-Yorker.

Should Remove Tusks

Tusks should be removed from male pigs that are to be kept for breeding, states a writer in Wallaces' Farmer. A boar with tusks is a potentially dangerous animal at all times. The best time to remove the tusks is when the pigs are only a few days old. Cut the teeth close to the gums, with nippers which are made for this purpose. Be careful not to injure the gums, since an open wound furnishes an ideal place for disease.

Faults and Virtues

WE MAY, if we choose, make the worst of one another. Everyone has his weak points; everyone has his faults; we may make the worst of these. But we may also make the best of one another. By loving whatever is lovable in those around us, love will flow back from them to us, and life will become a pleasure instead of a pain; and earth will become like Heaven; and we shall become not unworthy followers of Him whose name is Love.—Dean Stanley.

Proverbs are potted wisdom.

Water's Temperature

The highest temperature to which water can be heated is the boiling point, which depends upon the surrounding air pressure. At sea level, where the pressure is 14.7 lbs. per sq. in., the boiling point of water is 212 degrees Fahrenheit, and it cannot be heated above that temperature. At lower pressures the boiling point is lower, and at higher pressures the boiling point is higher.

JUNIORS HUMBLE SENIORS TO WIN CLASS TOURNEY

Sophomore Five Wins Consolation Game From Freshmen

Members of the junior class of Klemme high school were a rather boastful group after the annual inter-class tournament Friday evening, for their basketball quintet upset the dope-bucket and did everything but mop the floor with a highly favored Senior team who were playing with out the services of their star center, Kaduce Led by Jorgenson and Trampel the junior boys rolled up a 19 to 6 lead at halftime and gradually increased their lead till the final whistle blew on a 46 to 12 score It has been a long time since the haughty Senior fives have been unable to win the class tourney, but the class of 1937 could not cope with the inspired attack of Junior aggregation

Jorgenson tossed 12 field goals and a couple of gift shots for a total of 26 points to tie the floor record, or rather we should say the old floor record, as he set a new mark of 29 points in the opening game against the Freshman team Schuldt was the defensive mainstay of the champions and was ably assisted by Bailey, Lau, Wille and Lewis, all of whom saw service in the game

SUPERINTENDENT'S LETTER

Dear Parents·

Some of our neighboring towns are having serious epidemics of scarlet fever Because of this fact we are taking every precaution to prevent the start of one here Therefore when a child appears to be sick with any of the symptoms that are commonly connected with this disease we are asking parents to keep the child out of school until they have secured a physician's statement certifying that the sickness is not a contagious one

This action is in accord with instructions from the state department of health and with orders from our local health officer We first asked parents to keep all of the children in the family home, but that will not be necessary now if a doctor's advice is secured at once

We believe that all parents will be as anxious as we are to learn the nature of their children's sickness and that everyone will be glad to cooperate in preventing an epidemic here

Sincerely yours,
W. Henry Galbreth

SIX ACTS WILL BE AFARDED APPEARANCE AT AVERY

Outstanding Feature of Program Is Variety of Numbers

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted
by William Bruckart

National Press Building Washington, D. C.

Washington—I have been wondering whether the rank and file of the American citizens have been able to piece together the many loose ends of the distressing conditions extant throughout the world. It is to be recognized, of course, that when a man like Dictator Stalin of Russia makes a statement that war in Europe is just ahead, it awakens the peoples of the world with a sudden start. That is the spectacular side. But there is much more about European political conditions than is disclosed in the Stalin declaration.

World Conditions

The thing that students and observers of European affairs can see in conditions abroad, as they view them in the light of our own State Department's information, is that a gigantic battle is on between two schools of thought. On the one hand is communism. On the other hand, and just as firmly entrenched and as deeply determined, is fascism. Followers of these two lines of thought are both literally and figuratively at each other's throat, and the picture when pieced together, can lead to no other conclusion than that which Stalin foresees, namely, war.

I have lately heard some observers make the statement that the Spanish rebellion is the crux of the problem. I cannot agree with that. Spain and her revolution may prove to be the spark that ignites the European powder keg, but Spain and her revolution are just incidents in the developments that came originally from the overthrow of the Czar's government in Russia and the establishment for the first time of a commune of the proletariat in the world.

It was unfortunate for the world and for those people who wanted to promote peace at all times that the Versailles treaty had to take shape as it did. The Versailles treaty subjugated Germany beyond all reason. I think that will be accepted by all save the most violent partisans of the late President Wilson. It seems to me, however, that the Versailles treaty has proved to be the second stage in the chain of circumstances that led to Mussolini in Italy, Hitler in Germany, overthrow of the royalists in Spain, and lately the election of a "people's front" in France.

Any analysis of that chain of circumstances cannot fail to include the effect the Versailles treaty had upon European conditions. In some ways, the effect was direct; in others, it was indirect, and the full import of the treaty provisions were not evident until eight or ten or even twelve years after the four great powers had made that treaty effective and, they believed, effectually disarmed and bottled up Germany.

After many conversations with diplomats, foreign students and Washington government officials, I believe too much importance cannot be attached to the attempt made by the Versailles treaty to break up political jurisdictions. The treaty, it will be remembered, created a vast number of insignificant and rather helpless states in Europe. They were supposed to serve as a buffer between the larger nations and prevent scrapping and making faces among those world powers that had engaged in the last war. The effect, it has now been proved, is exactly the opposite.

Throughout Europe, according to the official and unofficial word that I get, there is a new kind of hatred among nations. It is not the hatred that obtained between France and Germany under Kaiser Wilhelm. It is a hatred not between the statesmen of the various countries, but among the rank and file of the people. That is to say, it is a vengeful feeling and when that is understood, it is not difficult to realize how vicious the undercurrent of relations is from Russia on the north to the Straits of Gibraltar, or even into Africa on the south.

Hatred Exists

To bring this condition into today's light, one hardly need look further than the various cabled dispatches from European capitals, each telling a story how the respective governments are watching the Spanish revolution. Again, the Russian Stalin puts the thing into a spectacular relief. If reports can be accredited, and official information indicates that they can be regarded as having a basis of fact, Stalin is ready to lend assistance to the so-called loyalist armies in Spain.

Now the loyalist armies, representing the government that is barely holding on by the skin of its teeth, are wholly communistic. Hence, Stalin's interest.

But the Russian dictator might be regarded as horning into a mess that does not concern his nation, except for another and most important piece of information. That information, not officially confirmed but generally believed, is to the effect that Italy's Mussolini has a finger in the pie on the fascist side of the Spanish revolution. The rebel armies in Spain are fascists. Hence it is quite understandable how the Italian dictator may be mixed up in promoting, even extending military assistance, to the rebel Spaniards. Thus we have definitely a triangle that surrounds the peoples of Europe. Within the boundaries of that triangle are jealousies unparalled, political propaganda of a sort never before unleashed on the world, and millions upon millions of people who may be classed as unthinking. They are of a type comparable to the lowest grade of American individuals who, while not wholly illiterate, cannot be accredited with the power to reason. They are being led into the very jaws of another war by wholly unscrupulous and unprincipled agitators who are posing as the friend of the common man. They are working on fertile ground.

Repeatedly, I hear questions asked concerning whether the United States is likely to get involved in that bottomless pit of Europe and, a kindred question, whether communism and fascism are gaining in the United States. The answer to the first half of that question must be made in two ways. We are likely to get involved unless some of our government policies are changed. But we can stay out if those policies do undergo revision. Whether we find ourselves embroiled in that horrible mess, depends entirely on the Washington government and the attitude of the Washington government appears entirely upon the attitude of the American people.

We Can Stay Out

And that statement brings me to the most important observation that I have to make in connection with this discussion. It is now a definite fact that communists are spreading their propaganda through the United States in an effort to create a war spirit. It is the beginning of their movement to drag us into another world war and if we get in, it means the end of the American nation, as the land of freedom for us all. Our economic structure, as well as our government, will be destroyed. I have no hesitancy in making such a statement.

After the World war it took us twenty years to recognize what the cost of that war was. I mean the cost of disturbed lives more than I refer to money cost. The depression resulted from that war just as surely as the sun shines, and we are all now getting well fed up with this depression. And so I say on the basis of conclusions given me from countless authoritative sources, we cannot stand another war of the proportions of the World war and retain our government in its present form, our traditions, our institutions. There will be no preventing such a breakdown.

As I have said in these columns before, one particular criticism that I have against the Roosevelt administration is its capitulation to Russia. Frankly, I believe Mr. Roosevelt was trapped. I believe he saw too late what the full meaning of his action was when he recognized Russia—that is, recognized his mistake too late unless he believes in the doctrine of the communists. In any event, it is my firm conviction that the recognition of the Soviet opened the door through which now are marching hordes of men and women squinty-eyed, unprincipled in character, unpronounceable names, ruthless in design. They are bringing the propaganda which I mentioned. This is not intended to be a scare story. The evidence of communistic propaganda probably is all about you in your own communities. It is subtle, cleverly handled. Sometimes, it is even very boldly done. For example, in many of the larger cities today, handbills in appearance like those that are used announcing a public sale, are finding their way into the playgrounds of public schools. Allegedly brilliant lecturers are going about the country making what appear to be educational addresses, but containing, in many instances, propaganda argument in support of the communistic theory.

Roosevelt Trapped?

There are many other types of this propaganda under way. Professor Rexford Guy Tugwell published a text book on government a few years ago and he has succeeded in getting that volume into the special list of books for Delaware schools. It contains declarations definitely opposed to the American form of government.

It is unnecessary to point out more of these things. The point is quite definite and clear. The movement toward communism in this country is proceeding slowly, cautiously, because the communistic leaders recognize American sentiment must be changed slowly, but the slimy head of the snake is coming out of the water and it will be much bolder if we become involved in the European struggle. Communists would make of us American citizens each and every one a communist and would throw us into the world struggle on the side of communism and against fascism.

Alcohol for Auto Fuel Being Made From Kansas Corn

Product Will Be Blended With Commercial "Gas"

ATCHISON, KAN.—America's first power alcohol plant is producing new fuel for motor cars. Two batches of anhydrous ethyl alcohol made from corn, totaling 2,000 gallons, have poured from the stills of the Chemical Foundation-sponsored plant of the Bailor Manufacturing company here.

Officials expressed themselves as pleased with the performance of the new plant and predicted that in a month the capacity of 10,000 gallons a day would be realized.

Alcohol-blended gasoline under the name of agrol will be on sale shortly in seven midwestern states at prices that will compete on a quality basis with straight gasoline fuels.

Outlet for Surpluses.

The production of power alcohol from surplus farm products in this plant is being watched by leaders in agriculture, the oil industry and other fields, including government, because it is a practical demonstration of the Farm Chemurgic Council's thesis that crops from American soil can be utilized for manufacture of industrial materials.

The Atchison plant also produces butyl as well as ethyl alcohol and as a valuable by-product evaporates the spent mash into a protein feed for stock. The butyl alcohol is used in connection with the ethyl alcohol production.

The ethyl alcohol, the same stuff that gives the kick to liquor, is used blended with gasoline to produce motor fuel. The whole output of the Bailor plant is being taken by the Chemical Foundation of Kansas for distribution at a price not to exceed 25 cents a gallon.

At the plant the alcohol is denatured and then blended with an equal volume of a petroleum to make what is called "agrol fluid." This blend will be used by filling station operators to make three grades of agrol gasoline, known as agrol 5, agrol 10 and agrol 15. These numbers indicate the quantity of alcohol of the standard blends when 60 octane gasoline is taken as the base fuel. If the filling station uses higher octane gasoline, less agrol fluid is needed, and if lower octane gasoline is the base, more agrol fluid is blended.

Synthetic Cloth Is Produced From Fiber of Raw Meat

BERLIN.—Raw meat is the newest item on the German "Ersatz" list, to replace part of the costly imports of wool and other fabric material.

But a suit of raw meat clothes is not as gory to wear and look at as it sounds. Carnofil, as the new fiber is called, comes from the hands of German chemists and fabric technologists looking and feeling very much like good ordinary woolen cloth.

Tough Meat Used.

Carnofil depends on the "stringiness" of meat, a property we all have noticed — usually with annoyance — when we get a piece of beef from a cow that reached too venerable an age before she visited the butcher. Cooks try to mitigate this stringiness by various means.

In making Carnofil the exact opposite is sought; the juicy part is dissolved away by chemical treatment, and the dried fibers are then mechanically treated to render them more flexible.

Carnofil is a coined, semi-Latin word, meaning "meat-thread."

Powerful Antiseptics Made From Oat Hulls

SAN FRANCISCO.—Oat hulls and other farm wastes may in the future yield powerful antiseptics for use in medicine and for combating plant diseases, as they already supply industry with materials for making plastic products such as steering wheels, radio panels, and electric insulators.

Doctors N. M. Phatak and C. D. Leake, of the University of California Medical school here, have combined furan, an oat-hull derivative, with mercury in various ways, producing a number of promising germ-killing compounds. In dilutions one part of antiseptic in from 15,000 to 30,000 parts of water, they killed test cultures of colon bacilli and the yellow germs that cause boils.

Mother Earth Adds Pound an Hour to Her Avoirdupois

Diet of Stone and Iron Drops From the Skies

OLD MOTHER EARTH is putting on weight at the rate of nearly a pound an hour, on a diet consisting of stone and iron. She makes no secret of it either, for at least the larger mouthfuls are signaled by shooting stars.

How fast the earth receives new matter from interstellar space was worked out from the addresses presented by Dr. F. G. Watson and Dr J. L. Greenstein, both of Harvard College Observatory, before the meeting of the American Astronomical society at Harvard University.

Dr. Watson made a special study of the rate of fall of what might be called micro-meteors, which are bits of cosmic dust gathered in by the earth as it speeds through space, but which are so small that they do not make the brilliant flashes that mark the capture of their larger brethren, the meteors or shooting stars.

Birth of Shooting Stars.

The brilliant shooting stars on which young people "make a wish" are caused by the evaporation in the high upper atmosphere of bits of stone or iron, the biggest about the size of a pinhead.

Dr. Watson's micro-meteors are much smaller than that, the smallest detected with his special instruments being about a hundredth of a millimeter in diameter. That is about the size of a yeast cell, or a good, fat, outsize germ.

Dr. Watson's studies showed that every day the earth's atmosphere receives approximately one hundred thousand million meteors and micrometeors.

How Rate Is Estimated.

Their total mass comes to an estimated ten kilograms daily. A kilogram is a little over two pounds, so that the hourly rate is somewhere around one pound.

Dr. Greenstein conducted his research on similar drifting solid particles as they exist in the far interstellar spaces, for they seem to be everywhere in the astronomically explorable universe. Particularly thick masses of them cut off light from distant stars, making the dark nebulae, or "coal sacks," that have proved so puzzling and tantalizing to astronomers.

Gigantic Model of "Ol' Man River" Is Used in Flood Study

NIAGARA FALLS. — Army engineers are turning back the calendar through the years and re-enacting the great floods of the Mississippi river, it was revealed at the meeting of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers here by Lieut. F. H. Falkner, Engineer corps, United States army.

Lieut. Falkner is director of the U. S. Waterways Experiment station at Vicksburg, Miss.

Scene of the re-creation of Mississippi floods is the great 1,100 foot long model at Vicksburg of Ol' Man River's domain from south of Helena, Ark., to the river's mouth.

Represents 16,000 Miles.

The model shows the 602 miles of the main river channel, the five principal tributaries, all backwater areas and the entire Atchafalaya basin to the Gulf of Mexico. Total area of the river section portrayed is 16,000 square miles.

At present, Lieutenant Falkner discolosed, studies are under way for the purpose of determining the extent and sequence of work required for handling the 1927 flood.

In the past year there has been made a survey of flood water routing through the emergency diversion outlets from the main channel of the Mississippi river through the Atchafalaya basin.

The Vicksburg station is only one of 41 division and district offices throughout the nation in which the army's corps of engineers is conducting over three hundred separate experiments on all phases of river navigation and flood control.

Holy Land Crusader's Prison to Be Explored

MUNICH.—The castle where King Richard the Lion-Hearted was imprisoned when he returned from crusading in the Holy Land, now only an imposing ruin, is to be excavated and restored as a part of an extensive project for the investigation of some of the historic castle ruins in the Rhenish palatinate, undertaken by the German state of Bavaria.

This castle, still known by its ancient name of Trifels, came into the possession of the German emperor, Heinrich IV, in the year 1081.

During the reign of Henry VI it was rebuilt and extended; it was in this renovated castle that the famous English king was imprisoned, along with many Sicilian nobles.

Those hostile to new ideas might remember that a little more than seventy-five years ago men were beaten for re-election to congress because, as the voters put it, "they were foolish enough to vote money to experiment talking over wires."

Berlin reports that German booksellers must sell, and Germans must read, only books that the government thinks they ought to sell and read. The public will be compelled with "loving force" to read what is good for them.

That takes Germany back to the Seventeenth century, when the English government decided that Englishmen must read only what the government thought was good for them.

All books must be submitted and wait for approval before printing. Along came a man named John Milton with his book the Areopagetica, printed by him without anybody's permission, denouncing an infamous law that would control men's minds and freedom of thought. That settled it; the law died.

Somebody will kill it in Germany, in time.

Great Armies of Blind Ants Rout All Enemies

Where are they going? No one knows But the lion, elephant or human being all fly in terror before their blind advance For these are the armies of the blind ants—and when they meet a resistance they cannot see, they go through it, declares a writer in Pearson's Weekly

Driver ants are only an inch long, but they are the most dreaded of living creatures They are trained as methodically as any army. Their columns of march are perfectly organized with the females packed in the center, flanked each side by a strong line of protecting males.

In front of the column march the soldiers and skirmishing parties. Their job is to find suitable camping sites and to give warning of danger.

Their method of crossing a river is ingenious. The soldiers select a suitable spot for crossing The ants then break column, and form themselves onto a compact ball—females inside, males next, and outside, the more powerful soldiers. This ball rolls down the bank into the stream and is whirled across to the other side by the current

When the driver ants come to a village the inhabitants run for their lives. To remain would be to be eaten alive. The drivers devour every rat, spider, dog or chicken that is left, before passing on in their relentless march. They are, in fact, nature's spring cleaners, for the villages are always cleaner after their visit.

Keys an Ancient Symbol of Power and Authority

Keys have always been the symbol of power and authority, notes a writer in the Montreal Herald

The ancients believed that their gods held the keys of the life-giving fertilizing rivers, and thus controlled the rise and fall of the waters.

Babylonians, who seem to have been the first users of keys, represented their gods as carrying keys.

The Romans gave some of their deities the title of "Key-Bearer." Hecate the three headed goddess of enchantment, was supposed to hold the keys of the gates of Hades Janus, the sun-god, held the keys of peace and war, times and seasons.

Modern wedding rings have their origin in ancient Rome. When the newly-wed wife came to her new home she was solemnly presented with the keys, suspended from a metal ring which became the bridal ring.

Roman law recognized the key-ring as a symbol of authority given by the husband to his bride when he made the Roman marriage vow: "Where I am master, you shall be mistress!"

Smoke Telegraph

Among sight signals, some of the earliest and most widely employed for communication by day were based on the rising of smoke Since man, alone of all animals, uses fire, the appearance of smoke was always accepted by primitive man as evidence of the presence of another human being. If not self-explanatory, a column of smoke signified the danger of a potential enemy. If, however, the smoke was seen in some particular place, or appeared in some particular manner, it was a symbol of friendship and, through the use of a prearranged code, could be used for communication. By alternately covering a smoldering fire with a blanket and uncovering it, the North American Indian broke the steady column of smoke, which rose from it, up into a series of puffs or clouds, the sequence or combinations of which could be used, according to prearrangement, to "telegraph" from place to place, either directly or by the use of relays.

How Indians Tanned Hides

One process used by the Indians in tanning deer hides was first to scrape off all fat and flesh adhering to the pelt. Then the fat and brains of the deer would be rubbed into the flesh side and the skin rinsed out in water repeatedly. It was a long and tedious process to create a really fine piece of buckskin, states a writer in the Detroit News, but the Indians didn't mind for they had plenty of time on their hands and, anyway, the squaws did most of the work. Two kinds of buckskin were created; one was white and the other smoke-tanned. The last was repeatedly smoked during the tanning process over a small fire with plenty of smoke. After many weeks of labor the hide would be ready for fashioning in garments.

BANK GROUPS MAKE NATIONWIDE SURVEY

American and State Banking Associations Collaborate in Investigation

LOAN SERVICES STUDIED

Activities of the Government in the Banking Field Are Reviewed and Position of Banks Analyzed

NEW YORK.—Detailed bank researches, covering all phases of practical operating and economic facts and conditions related to banking, are being made by the American Bankers Association. The resulting material is being placed at the disposal of all state banking associations, which in many instances are extending the researches of the national association in their own states. These activities are said to be a part of the general program of banking development which is being carried on by the organized banking business.

Among the most extensive researches being conducted by the American Bankers Association is that of its Committee on Banking Studies, which is making a detailed survey of Federal Government lending agencies and policies. The basic material, which is kept up to date by continuing studies, shows where the Government agencies get the money they lend, what liability the Government assumes, what subsidy it extends, what return it gets, for what and to whom the money goes and on what terms it is loaned.

The Government in Banking

"It is not the intention of the committee to express its viewpoint about any agency," says the foreword to this material. "Its intention is only to determine the facts. These facts properly assembled and presented should help banks to meet Government competition if and where it exists. The committee believes the Government entered the lending field at a critical period in order to aid banks and financial institutions. If the time has come for the Government to withdraw, it is the duty of bankers to demonstrate their readiness to take care of all sound credit needs."

It adds that the banks must be equipped with full factual material as to the Government's emergency lending activities and practices, and that full cooperation has been given the committee by Government agencies in obtaining facts. Binders of the material gathered have been placed by the committee in the hands of state associations.

Investigation of Postal Savings

The Committee on Banking Studies has also made a survey of the Postal Savings System throughout the United States to ascertain to what extent it is competing with chartered banks. Questionnaires were sent to banks in all places where Postal Savings depositories are operated and their answers will be analyzed as a basis for the committee's findings

The Bank Management Commission of the American Bankers Association has made a nation-wide survey covering the movement among banks to increase their earning abilities "through fair and legitimate rates for services they render their depositors." It has developed a plan of account analysis as a basis of fair charges.

"All business in order to justify its existence is founded on the economic principle that a reasonable return should be expected from services rendered," the commission says.

Personal Income Loans

The Bank Management Commission has also formulated methods for installing and operating personal income loan departments in banks. "This plan contemplates making loans primarily to individuals and small business concerns, based upon the character and assured incomes of the borrowers, as distinguished from the usual basis for 'commercial loans,'" the commission says.

It points out that a large part of the population is not now making use of available bank credit and that "to these people the personal loan department extends a valuable service which at the same time is profitable to the bank." It adds that it is "the duty of the banks to educate the public to come to the bank for all financial services. Small borrowers should be informed that the local bank is willing to care for their demands."

Other Researches

Other researches are being made by the Economic Policy Commission of the association dealing with shrinkages in liquid commercial loans caused by economic changes in the nation's business methods while the National Bank Division has made studies of the lending and investment powers of this class of bank, the present status of the real estate investment field and of detailed data by states on earnings and expenses.

The Savings Division has gathered the facts showing savings in banks of all types, the number of savings depositors, the per capita savings for the country as a whole and the effects of current economic and social changes upon the savings habits of the American people.

The association's State Bank Division has issued the most recent figures available as to the detailed conditions of state banks, showing steady improvement in the position of the state banks, with marked expansion in their aggregate resources, while the Trust Division has compiled a guide to fees with a recommended cost accounting system.

Bundle of Twigs Serves as Calendar for Indians

A quaint system of calendar-making, similar to that employed by the Bible Patriarchs, is practiced by the Sarcee Indians of the Indian reserve outside Calgary, Alberta. It is the medicine man's responsibility, notes a writer in Tit-Bits Magazine, to transfer each morning a twig from a bundle representing the unused part of the month to another bundle that represents the used part. Altogether, he has five bundles, each containing thirty twigs. The third bundle, signifying June in summer and December in winter, is always kept in two equal parts. The divisions denote mid-summer's day in one instance and mid-winter's day in the other. In winter the twigs are kept with their points downwards; in summer the position is reversed. Having only five bundles to tally off six months each half-year, the medicine man always uses the fifth bundle twice. The picturesque names and emblems by which the Indians recognize the months run as follows:

April, Frog Moon, Bull Frog's Croak; May, Sprouting of Green Leaves and Grass; June, Egg (Duck's) Moon; July, Moulting (Duck's) Moon; August, Flying (Duck's) Moon; September, Running of the Deer; October, Fall of Leaves Moon; November, Misty Moon; December, Clear, Frosty Moon; January, Great Moon; February, Eagle Moon, eagles soar; March, Goose Moon, geese come.

Creation of Petroleum Antedates Animal Life

Oil is of inorganic origin, having been made by the interaction of certain elements inside the earth's crust while that body was aging into its present condition. Another theory is that it is of organic origin. This latter is the most generally accepted and it has the bulk of evidence to support it even though most of it is circumstantial. According to this theory oil was formed through an unusual and gradual breaking up of vast amounts of organic matter. Some of this organic matter was plant life but most of it was animal life and microscopic animal life at that.

Knowing the countless billions of gallons of petroleum that have been taken from the earth and knowing of the billions of gallons that still remain in the mighty subterranean reservoirs this might seem a bit incredible. But that is because we are unable to realize the extent of a million years or the number of animals that can live and die during that time.

The process which eventually led to the creation of petroleum started hundreds of millions of years before the first blade of grass grew or before the first bit of animal life moved about on dry land.—Pathfinder Magazine.

Species of Swans

Ornithologists seem to agree that there are but two species of swans native to the states; and both are pure white. One is the whistling swan, the most common and often found in Great Lakes waters. The other is the trumpeter swan, a bird of the west which is almost extinct. The whooping swan, another great white bird, was formerly abundant north of the Arctic circle and in Greenland but this bird is considered extinct. The Australian black swan is much smaller than these three and is frequently confused with our common black brant. The black swan is found only in zoos and bird sanctuaries in this country, according to a writer in the Detroit News, and many persons when they observe them think they are black brant.

Artificial Diamonds

Artificial diamonds were made many years ago by a French chemist, Henri Moissan. He got his idea when tiny diamonds were found in fragments of iron meteorites, according to a writer in Tit-Bits Magazine. Knowing diamonds were crystallized carbon he attempted to reproduce the conditions which had once existed in the meteorites. Dissolving carbon in molten iron he then suddenly cooled the mass. This caused the outside to harden first forming an outer shell which contracted and exerted a tremendous pressure on the inner substance. When the entire mass had cooled and hardened Moissan dissolved the iron away with hydrocholoric acid and found that tiny diamonds had been formed from the carbon.

Movable Freezing Point

Water will freeze when inclosed in a vacuum; it will freeze at a point 1 1-100 of a degree higher than the ordinary freezing point. To freeze, water must expand By placing a great pressure upon it and limiting its expansion, it is possible to reduce the freezing point. Experimenters have kept it from freezing, by this method, until it was several degrees below the zero of the Fahrenheit scale. Correspondingly, by reducing the normal pressure on the water expansion is freer and the freezing point is raised. The atmosphere pressure being comparatively slight, the creation of a vacuum serves to raise the freezing point only a small fraction of a degree.

Perry's Cave

Perry's Den, or Perry's Cave, is located about three-fourths of a mile southeast of Put-in-Bay harbor, says the Cleveland Plain Dealer. The floor of the cave is about 31 feet below the surface. The cave, which is electrically lighted, is oval shaped, the highest point being about nine feet above the floor. Only a few stalagmites are left in place.

Long Beards Are Traced to Days of Israelites

Tradition says that Adam wore a bushy beard, and the Israelites in Egypt distinguished themselves from their masters by cultivating long ones. Thus all artistic representatives of Biblical patriarchs depict them long-bearded. Aaron's beard is proverbial, and to swear by the beard constituted the most solemn oath. Mahomet followed the ancient tradition and never allowed a razor on his face. Mohammedans still swear by the beard of the Prophet. The Romans called the unshaven, bearded inhabitants of northern Europe, who eventually brought about the empire's fall, "barbarians," from the Latin barba, a beard, from which we get our "barber," and from which the famous Barbarossa, or Red Beard, was named, says Tit-Bits Magazine

Queen Mary I sent four agents to Moscow, all bearded, and one of them, George Killingworth, had a beard five feet long, which, it is said, made even Ivan the Terrible laugh! Hans Steininger, Burgomaster of Brannau, who died in 1567, is shown in his monument in the parish church there with a parted beard, beautifully waved, which reaches below his feet, and, were it pulled straight, would be six feet long. The actual beard is preserved in the local museum It is in two ropes, and its color is reddish brown.

Brazil Nut Crops Never Planted and Not Picked

There is no stranger harvest than that which supplies the demand for Brazil nuts, observes a writer in Pearson's Weekly. No human hand has ever sown the seeds, nor does the crop ever need picking. It lies, patiently waiting man's pleasure, on the sodden forest floor of that immense stretch of tropical jungleland in the lower Amazon valley. Here flourishes the Brazil nut tree, or castanha do Para, as the natives call it.

Despite this unusual lavishness of Nature, no harvest could be harder to win; none is fraught with more risks. Before reaching the wild nut groves, the castanheiros (nut gatherers) must penetrate hundreds of miles of fetid streams and swamps, home of flesh-eating fish, venomous water snakes and electric eels. The final stages of their journey must be hacked through dense matted undergrowth, where poisonous thorns, orchids, spiders and insects contest every yard of their progress.

The Clepsydra

Aeneas Tacticus wrote, about 350 B. C., describing an ingenious signaling device called the clepsydra. Two cylindrical vessels, of the same size and shape, were provided with taps from which water would run at exactly the same rate Into each vessel there was loosely fitted a float to which was attached an upright rod marked off into equal sections. On the corresponding sections of each rod, identical messages were written. When a message was to be sent, the attendant at the sending station displayed a torch. This signal was acknowledged by displaying a torch at the receiving station whereupon the attendants at both stations started the water running from their clepsydras. When the rod at the sending station had sunk so that the desired message was level with the rim of the vessel, the attendant there again signaled with his torch The rod at the receiving station had, of course, sunk to the corresponding message which was then read by the attendant there

"Marine Store Dealer"

When a sailing ship came into port in the old days a man used to go aboard and bid for the old sails that had been torn by tropical storms. He was also given odd lengths of rope and all the junk accumulated during a voyage of many months "Marine store dealer" was the man's title and he dealt with ships which sailed the Seven seas. Later there was little for the marine store dealer to do—the big shipping lines managed their own affairs. As his trade with ships went, the dealer started to buy rags, old bottles and the like from houses in seaport towns. Now he has become the unromantic rag-and-bone man—though still his official name is marine store dealer.—Pearson's Weekly

Care in Little Things

He that has "a spirit of detail" will do better in life than many who figured beyond him in the university.—Such a one is minute and particular.—He adjusts trifles; and these trifles compose most of the business and happiness of life—Great events happen seldom, and affect few; trifles happen every moment to everybody; and though one occurrence of them adds little to the happiness or misery of life; yet the sum total of their continual repetition is of the highest consequence.

Blue Paul

A great many years ago a dog resembling a cross between a mastiff and bulldog was quite popular in Scotland. It was called Blue Paul and was used primarily as a pit dog for fighting. The breed is considered extinct.

Forest of Arden

Englishmen claim that Shakespeare's romantic forest in "As You Like It" is the Forest of Arden in Warwickshire, which fits the description. Belgians claim it is the Forest of Ardennes. Either may be right, for both forests are romantic and lovely.

Floyd Gibbons Adventurers' Club Hello Everybody!

"The Spark of Life"

By FLOYD GIBBONS,
Famous Headline Hunter

HERE'S Distinguished Adventurer Howard Hartling of Brooklyn, N. Y., and his yarn starts out like this.

"Up on the surface we sat smoking.

"One of the smokers asked me for matches and I passed my box to him. When he returned it I put it back in my pocket without looking at it. A match was never of much value to me UNTIL MY LIFE DEPENDED ON HALF OF ONE."

Remember that Canadian mine disaster that happened up in Nova Scotia and took up so much space in the newspapers a while ago? Well, Howard Hartling is going to tell us the story of a similar misfortune that took place in the same mining district in August, 1900. As a young lad, Howard worked in the Famous gold mines in Halifax county, Nova Scotia. His job was on the 300-foot level where they were digging a new tunnel—a tunnel that was being dug around a deep pit filled with icy water so that the company could tap the gold vein that lay on the other side.

Smokers Borrowed His Matches.

Howard's adventure took place in that tunnel—but as Howard himself points out, it started up at the top of the shaft where a bunch of men sat around smoking and borrowing his matches.

Just about the time Howard's match box was handed back to him, the whistle blew and the men went down in the "cage" to the 300-foot level. They went to work and the afternoon wore on. The distant sounds of dynamiting reminded Howard that it was almost time to knock off, and he started for the mouth of the tunnel. As the sounds of exploding dynamite came nearer, he hurried his steps. He was turning into a cross tunnel leading to the shaft landing when the candle by which he was lighting his way flickered and went out.

Left In Pitch Black Darkness.

Only a little thing, the blowing out of that candle, but it left Howard In darkness, and darkness is one of the things a miner fears most. Once he took a wrong turning he might get into the old abandoned workings and be lost there for days—maybe forever. It wasn't exactly safe, either, for a man to stay below for long after the blastings started, and those explosions were coming perilously near. Hastily, Howard reached for his box of matches, and suddenly the darkness and the dynamiting took on a new and terrifying significance. THE MATCH BOX WAS EMPTY—CLEANED OUT BY THE SMOKERS AT NOON!

"It was a litle more than 300 yards to the landing," says Howard, "but that thousand feet had to be covered in pitch black darkness, by feeling my way along the foot-wall of the tunnel. There was no one near to get a light from. All the miners had gone out as their tasks were completed and before the blasting began for the day. Those explosions were coming nearer. I could smell the heavy, choking nitroglycerine smoke. I crept on slowly, but the fumes of the burning dynamite were getting more dense every minute.

"They were catching my throat. Breathing was becoming more difficult. The walls were wet and mucky with slime that had been formed millions of years before. It oozed from the rock crevices and dripped down on the floor of the passage. I crawled along till I realized I had gone many yards and should be seeing the lights of the shaft landing. Then something inside of me seemed to shout 'Stop!' I obeyed the impulse!

Lost In the Abandoned Workings.

"Underfoot the floor of the tunnel seemed unfamiliar. It dawned on me then that I had taken the wrong turning at the cross tunnel. I had entered the old abandoned workings. I WAS LOST!"

In his left hand, Howard still gripped his unlighted candle. If only he had another match. Again, something inside him began to prompt him—to urge him to make another search of his pockets. "Carefully," he said, "I wiped my muddy right hand on my coat and opened my vest. Carefully—very carefully—I made my search. In the upper right pocket I found half a match.

I couldn't tell which half it was, but I held the candle over in the shelter of my open coat. Where, in that damp tunnel, could I find a place to scratch this precious half of a match? Would it light? I thought of the buckle on my suspenders. I felt for it. With a prayer I tried that splinter of wood!"

Howard scratched that piece of match—and it lighted. Quickly he guided it to the candle. The wick sputtered but—IT LIT! Howard breathed a prayer of thanks. Then, with a light to see by, he began looking around him.

On the Brink of Waterfilled Pit.

Says he: "I held that candle aloft and let my gaze wander. I was in the old tunnel. Not 20 feet ahead was the old, abandoned, waterfilled pit. A hundred feet of icy water was waiting for me. Another minute and I would have plunged to my death. A GRAVE 400 FEET UNDERGROUND! I almost collapsed at the thought!"

But suddenly, Howard was on his toes again. A new blast, so close that it deafened him, reminded him that he still was not out of danger. "I dared not hurry," he says, "as my light might go out again, and this time I wouldn't have even half a match. Another blast and water began trickling in from the old workings. By the time I reached the cross tunnel it was half way to my knees. Then, at last, the lights at the hoisting shaft came into view through the murky smoke. A hoarse voice, choked from the fumes, bawled out, 'F'r Pete's sake hurry up. We're holding the cage. Where in heck were you? You look white as a ghost.'

"And," says Howard, "I would have been one—only for half a match!"

Contents of Malleable Iron

Malleable iron contains from 1.5 to 2.0 per cent carbon and is cast iron that has received a heat treatment for a week or more, which changes the form of the carbon, making it tough and capable of withstanding considerable twisting and bending. It can not be welded successfully, but is easily and satisfactorily brazed with torch. It is used extensively in farm equipment as well as for pipe fittings, harness hardware, etc. A broken malleable casting has a smoother appearance than ordinary cast iron and bends before breaking.

California's Vigilantes

California's vigilantes of 1851 had to cope with not only the most criminal and lawless gathered from all four corners of the earth, but with the shyster lawyers as well. Just as the worst type of criminal lawyers of later times, their weapons were mistakes in spelling the name of the accused on indictments and warrants, the charge that the law claimed their client killed with a pistol, whereas it should have stated "by the discharge of said pistol," and so on, right through all the technicalities and loopholes we read about.

Sungmas of Tibet

Crowds Witness Trance of TibetanSungma.

Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.

ANCIENT Greece had her oracle of Delphi; Tibet has her Sungmas, men believed to have similar powers. Sungmas are, to the Tibetans, neither sorcerers nor incarnations, but the abodes of malignant spirits, or spirits of demonized heroes who, subdued by saintly lamas or high incarnations, have become the protectors of religion.

These roving demon spirits, obedient to the spells cast over them, are said to select either a lama or a layman as their abode during the lifetime of the person thus selected. Distinct from incarnations, they manifest themselves involuntarily as well as voluntarily in their chosen abodes.

Any lamasery with a claim to importance has its oracle, though some of the supposed Sungmas are impostors who work themselves into frenzy merely for pecuniary gain. Every Sungma has his fee, the amount depending on the importance of his demon spirit, and the wealth of the person who seeks the augury. Sometimes as much as 1,000 tankas ($100 or more) will be exacted.

Whether oral or written, the replies the Sungmas give to questions have true Delphic vagueness and ambiguity. They confine themselves mainly to advice concerning the performance of meritorious deeds to counteract evil influences or ward off calamities. The questions usually are written on slips of paper and handed to the Sungma, who, without looking at them, holds them above his head and "answers" them with incredible rapidity.

Five Chief Ones In Lhasa.

Although there are many Sungmas, genuine or pretending, throughout Tibet, the five of real importance reside in Lhasa. One of them, recognized as the state oracle, Na chung, is consulted by the Dalai Lama.

These oracles play an important role in the selection of high incarnations, or in the search for the incarnation of a deceased Dalai Lama. All five are consulted and their answers checked. Before action can be taken, the five must be found to agree on the identity of the child believed to be the incarnation, the name and appearance of its mother, the location and description of the house it resides in, and the details of its surroundings

It was several years ago at the lamasery of Yungning in northwestern Yunnan that a staff writer of the National Geographic Magazine learned of the existence of these mysterious Sungmas. The abbot told him that the famous Balung chu dje, one of the Sungmas of Lhasa, was to perform in Yungning at the Feast of the Lights on the day of commemoration of the death of Tsong K'apa, founder of the Yellow lama church.

The human abode, or chu dje, of Sungma Balung chu dje, was the person of a Chungtien lama, a native of the Tongwa (Tibetan) tribe, the son of a Tongwa bandit chief of northwest Yunnan. This "possessed" lama, who had been residing in Lhasa for several years, had stopped at Yungning on his way to visit his birthplace in Chungtien. He is said to be the abode of the powerful demon Chechin.

There are several Sungmas who are supposed to be the chu dje of Chechin. Of these the most important is a lama called Betin Konser chu dje from the name of Chechin's house on the market square of Lhasa; and the second in rank is the one the writer saw perform in Yungning—Balung chu dje, named after another residence of Chechin. As their names indicate, they are considered "houses" of Chechin.

Both Balung chu dje and Betin Konser chu dje, before going into a trance; that is, before Chechin takes possession of them, don the robes of a Sungma—elaborately decorated embroidered garments often made of gold brocade, the gift of some devout worshiper. Thus arrayed, they take their seats in foreign fashion—not cross-legged—on ornate chairs, usually near the entrance within the main temple of the lamasery.

Invoking the Spirit.

Some of the lamas in attendance begin to chant the classic of Chechin, beseeching the spirit to take possession of his chu dje; while some ring bells or blow conch shells; and others, carrying incense burners, walk around the bowed figure of the waiting Sungma, wafting the fragrant smoke of juniper twigs as offering to Chechin.

The Sungma sat motionless on the throne in the somber chanting hall, his face buried in his hands, breathing the fragrant juniper smoke, while the deep, low tones of the chanting lamas, punctuated by bell ringing and the blowing of conch shells, lent mystery to the whole scene. A tall, curiously decorated and plumed iron hat, weighing about 50 pounds, was placed beside him.

The visitor stood with the old Hhkhin chief behind one of the tall pillars of the temple hall close enough to the Sungma to watch him, and yet safely out of his reach. When Chechin has entered the performer's body, he often acts like a raving maniac.

Soon the Sungma began to accompany the lamas in their mumbling prayers, while the incense went the round, and the silent audience awaited the spirit of Chechin. Suddenly sonorous blasts of large trumpets and deafening clash of cymbals burst forth, and the Sungma moved uneasily in his seat.

The Sungma Grows Violent.

A deep, gargling sound escaped him, and his hands clasped his throat. The attending lama, a brother of Balung, now lifted the huge hat upon the Sungma's head and tied it firmly under the chin. By this time the performer was fully possessed by the spirit. The gargling sound is believed to be a sure sign of the presence of Chechin, who, the classic relates, died by suffocating himself with a kattak, a silk scarf.

Balung still sat dreaming for a while; then all at once his body began to sway and his legs to shake. Frantically he threw himself backward while lamas held him and tried to balance him. He spat and groaned; blood oozed from his mouth and nostrils, his face became purple—inflated to such an extent that the leather chin strap burst.

He took a sword handed to him, a strong Mongolian steel blade. In the twinkling of an eye he twisted it with his naked hands into several loops and knots!

The attending lamas wiped his face, and tried to comfort him. A lama now stood in front of him with a round silver platter on which reposed an offering, a triangular pyramid of tsamba, or barley-flour dough. This the lama held to the Sungma's face, so that his forehead touched it. The lamas changed the tune and tempo of their chant.

Still shaking, the possessed Sungma took a handful of rice, and threw it violently into the crowd. At this point the abbot of the monastery approached, bowing and kowtowing, only to be beaten severely on the back with the flat of a sword wielded with merciless fury by the Sungma. Fear spread among the crowd; the abbot fled; the Sungma continued to shake from head to foot with uncontrollable convulsions!

Now was the time for worshipers to receive Chechin's blessing. A regular fight ensued as the lamas of the monastery, each carrying a small silk scarf (kattak) as offering, thronged forward. Each lama tried to get to the Sungma to place a kattak on his shaking knees and receive the blessing of a blow, puff of breath from his distorted mouth, or a gentle laying on of his hands.

Three More Seizures.

All at once the Sungma, puffing and blowing, threw himself backward exhausted and lay like a lifeless form for a few minutes. The spirit of Chechin had flown, none knew whither.

When Balung rose, he was weeping and whining. His garments now were adjusted, and a different headgear, the sort worn by minor Sungmas, was placed upon his head. Three of the underlings of Chechin were to manifest themselves in this Chungtien lama.

Seizure was not long in coming. Almost immediately the afflicted man leaned forward and began to shake. The lamas near him handed him bow and arrows and a flagstaff. With outstretched arms he stood erect, spat, puffed, and blew.

The lamas again rushed to receive his blessing. The more privileged, the abbot and the Living Buddha of Yungning, came first; then the mob. The latter were less fortunate, for only two had received the blessing when the shaking stopped and the Sungma again threw himself backward, groaning.

He rested thus for only a minute; then rose and with a terrific thump fell back upon his chair, shaking like an epileptic. In this state he received the homage of the throng.

HISTORIC MURDER

ONE hundred and ten years ago a man was murdered and as a direct result of that crime we now have, every four years, national conventions of delegates from every state and territory in the Union to nominate candidates for President and vice-president. Here's how it came about:

In 1826 William Morgan of Batavia, N. Y., published a book which purported to reveal the secrets of Freemasonry. Soon afterwards he disappeared and the Masons were not only accused of having kidnaped him and drowned him in the Niagara river but also of blocking a proper investigation of his disappearance. From western New York, opposition to the Masons spread to other states and several demagogic young politicians, among them Thurlow Weed and William H. Seward of New York and Thaddeus Stevens of Pennsylvania, seized upon the movement to promote their own ambitions.

The result was the organization of the Anti-Masonic party and in September, 1830, the first Anti-Masonic convention, the first national convention of any party, was held in Philadelphia, attended by 96 delegates from ten states. It was decided to hold another convention the next year to nominate candidates for President and vice-president and this meeting was to be composed of as many delegates from each state as there were representatives in both houses of congress.

Accordingly in September, 1831, the convention was held in Baltimore and it nominated for President William Wirt of Maryland, who had been attorney-general in Monroe's cabinet, and for vice-president Amos Ellmaker of New York. In the election of 1832 these candidates won only the electoral vote of Vermont. Later this party was absorbed by the Whigs and lost its identity, except in Pennsylvania where it elected a governor in 1835 and continued as a separate party for a few years.

But during the Anti-Masonic party's short existence it had pointed the way for others to follow in the method of choosing candidates. It gave them the national nominating convention and while convention procedure has since been changed in many ways, from that day to this the fundamental principle upon which it was based has remained unchanged—democratic representation of the party constituency.

KANSAS CAMPAIGNER

THE state of Kansas is in the limelight this year because for the first time in history a nominee of one of the major parties comes from the Sunflower state. Moreover, it has two candidates for the presidency—Gov. Alf. M. Landon heading the Republican ticket and Earl Browder of Wichita, the leader of the Communist party.

This is not the first time, however, that a Kansan has been a nominee. Back in 1884 there was another, also a governor.

His name was John Pierce St. John, a native of Indiana, an adventurer in California in the gold rush days, a lawyer in Illinois and a soldier in the Civil war, rising to the rank of lieutenant-colonel of an Illinois volunteer regiment. After the war he moved to Missouri where he practiced law for a time and became noted as a political orator. In 1869 he moved to Kansas where he was to win his greatest renown.

He served in the state senate in 1873-4 but declined re-election and in 1878 was elected governor by the Republican party. Re-elected in 1880, he won the Republican nomination for a third term in 1882 but was defeated in the election.

Always a pronounced enemy of the liquor traffic, St. John was nominated for President on the Prohibition ticket in 1884 and polled a total of 151,809 votes. This was 20,000 more than the vote for Butler, the candidate of the "Greenbackers," so that he was the "runner-up" in the race between Cleveland and Blaine.

During his canvass for the presidency, St. John traveled extensively over the United States making speeches in behalf of the "dry" cause. In fact, during his 14 years of public life he is said to have hung up a record of travel exceeded by few candidates for office. He traveled more than 300,000 miles by rail, during which time he never had an accident nor was sick a day and made a total of 4,000 speeches, missing but four engagements in all that time.

Norwegian Pagan Festival

Originally a Norwegian pagan festival in honor of the sun, St. Hans eve is celebrated throughout the country with bonfires, dancing and merrymaking the whole night through. In Oslo, the entire population, it seems, either boats out to islands in the fjord or goes out onto the tops of near-by mountains for the celebration. Bonfires are lighted on every hill, and at the outdor museums here and at Lillehammer, great demonstrations of folk dancing are given.

Egg Milady

Wives, Know Yourselves!—

Accurate Analysis Will Do Much to Overcome Difficulty in Wedded Life

SPEAKING on the question of trial marriages, a well known writer said, "There should be no need for trial when two people know their own abilities and have measured themselves accurately. Two people who understand themselves will never, I believe, have any difficulty living happily together after marriage."

That is a new slant on the question of success in marriage, supplements a woman writer of national fame. Not "Know thy husband' —or "wife," but "know thyself!"

And, come to think of it, isn't most of the discontent and dissatisfaction in marriage traceable to ideas of ourselves—that may be misconceptions, no less than our illusions about the other person?

How many women's dissatisfaction with their husband has as its source the thought of all they gave up to marry him, all they "might have had" if they had married a certain other man?

How many women's discontent with the role of wife and mother springs from the thought of how much more fascinating pastimes they might have had if they had followed that career?

How many girl's impossible expectations of a fulltime lover and Prince Charming originates in an exaggerated notion of their own devastating beauty and charm?

If all discontented wives would look deeply unto themselves, measure themselves, stop fooling themselves, many might discover that the other man they might have married is a self-nurtured illusion; that the career of their dreams is not a soft snap and a joy forever; but a grueling, exhausting job which might have worn them out if they had qualified for it, which they probably would have been unable to do; that they themselves are neither devastating beauties nor always charming, but women who are frequently disappointing and difficult to live with. They might discover and admit to themselves that they are greatly in debt to their husbands for many things that make life easier and better and more worthwhile—that they would not get along so well without them.

Then they might think more of doing their part of trying to make those husbands happy. And that effort on the part of one must inevitably go a long way toward a mutually happy and successful marriage.

What Luck the Lady Did Not Have Quinsy

It was the evening of an interesting family event, and the master of the house, who hoped it would be a son, had been pacing the floor, anxiously awaiting the doctor. When the physician entered the room the father seized him by the arm and demanded: "Is it a boy or a girl?"

"Tr-tr-tr——" gasped the doctor, who stuttered rather badly.

"Triplets!"

"Qu-qu-qu——" stammered the doctor.

"Quadruplets! Man alive! What is it you say!"

"No-n-no. Tr-tr-try to take it qu-qu-quietly. It's a girl."

Let us bring up our children simply, I had almost said rudely. Let us entice them to exercise that gives them endurance, even to privations. Let them belong to those who are better trained to fatigue and the earth for a bed than is the comfort of the table and couches of luxury.

So we shall make men of them, independent and staunch, who may be counted on, who will not sell themseves for pottage, and who will have withal the faculty of being happy.

FEEDING OF ROUGHAGE IS PROBLEM THIS YEAR

Although Iowa farmers have more roughage this year than following the drouth of 1934, quality of the roughage varies greatly and causes varying feeding problems in different localities

The chief roughage on many farms is corn silage of corn fodder. Fadder varies in quality from No. 1 green leafy roughage containing some corn to drouth-injured "feathery" fodder low in feeding quality and possibly moldy and injured by weather Silage varies from the normal silage, containing one-fourth or more by weight of corn, to silage made from grasshopper-stripped leafless, cornless stalks.

With normally matured cornstalks including the grain, from 1½ to 2 tons of fodder or from 2½ to 3 tons of silage will be required to equal in feeding value 1 ton of good mixed hay

Corn fodder or silage ordinarily is worth more for feeding any class of livestock when it is supplemented with some other good quality roughage. When alfalfa, soybean or clover hay is fed at the rate of about one-fourth to one-third of the usual hay ration along with silageor fodder, the coarse roughage willgo much farther in maintaining livestock. The legume hay helps offset the mineral and vitamin deficiencies in the silage or fodder, adds variety andhelps to keep livestock from becoming tired of the monotonous fodder or silage ration.

May Use Protein Concentrate

If legume hay is not available it is better to feed less fodder or silage and to supplement it with a protein such as soybeans, soybean oilmeal or cottonseed meal than to depend on the fodder alone. Thrift and weight of stock cattle can be maintained to much better advantage by using such a combination withmuch less fodder or silage than if the roughage were fed alone

Corn silage has many advantages over fodder from the same quality of corn. It is more palatable and can be used in larger amounts However silage is not a substitute for corn in fattening cattle Altho thin cows, heifers or plain quality steers will make satisfactory gains for a short time, choice cattle will not put on a desirable finish.

Betty, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Ward of southeast of Klemme, returned home Sunday from the hospital at Mason City where she underwent an appendix operation. Betty is making a good recovery and will soon be "as good as new" again.

Methodist Church Scene Of Wedding Sunday Eve

POPULAR KLEMME COUPLE TAKES MATRIMONIAL VOWS

Pearl Neuberger and Clarence Lemke United At Beautiful Candlelight Ceremony

An impressive candlelight service was viewed by a church full relatives and friends at the First Methodist Church in Klemme on Sunday evening, Nov 15 at 7 o'clock when Miss Pearl Neuberger, youngest daughter of Mr and Mrs Lewis Neuberger and Clarence Lemke, son of Mr and Mrs O W Lemke were united in marriage

After all the guests were seated Melvin Neuberger, an usher, took the mother of the bride to her place

Before the ceremony Mrs Carl Larson sang "I Love You Truly" and "At Dawning" and as the bridal party stood at the altar he sang "Because" Mrs Earl Schaeffer was the pianist.

To the strains of Lohengrin's Wedding March, played by Mrs Schaeffer, the ushers, Melvin and Donald Neuberger, brothers of the bride, and Ruben Lemke, cousin of the groom, came down the aisle they were followed by the brides maid, Miss Fay Neuberger, cousin of the bride; the flower girl, Miss Joan Smith; the ringbearer, Donald Eugene Neuberger; and finally the bride on the arm of her father who gave her in marriage The groom and best man, his brother, Wayne Lemke, and the minister entered from side entrances

The Rev. Wm. Zabilka, pastor, performed the marriage rites, using the double ring ceremony.

The bride was beautifully attired in a long white satin gown with long train and white satin pumps and wore a long tulle veil made cap style and trimmed with orange blossoms. She carried a shower bouquet of pink roses.

Miss Fay Neuberger, bridesmaid was attired in a floor-length dress of blue transparent velvet and wore a shoulder corsage of Talisman roses. The flower girl wore a blue taffeta dress and carried a basket of small white Pom-Poms and other assorted small flowers The ringbearer wore a blue suit and carried the rings in a white rose

The groom and best man were dressed in the conventional dark blue The groom wore a rose and the best man wore a large white carnation

ONE TRUCK'S WILD RIDE

Such destruction of property, particularly by irresponsible itinerant truckers, is the reason why safety councils nation-wide are seeking more stringent laws thoroughly regulating motor transports.

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted
By WILLIAM BRUCKART
NATIONAL PRESS BLDG. WASHINGTON, D. C.

Washington—It is only a few short weeks until the Seventy-fifth congress convenes and so naturally the preliminary grinding of legislative wheels is now being heard. Of course, there has been no legislative program formulated. Little of a specific character can be done in this direction until the fog and the smoke of a campaign drifts away. Nevertheless, beneath it all there are definite signs to guide us, to show some of the important questions that will naturally force their way to the front rank of consideration by congress as soon as it is formally organized January 3.

Work for Congress

While I do not take much stock in many of the ideas or schemes that are receiving consideration, or to which sponsors are trying to direct attention, it is perfectly evident that one of the major questions to receive congressional attention this year is the plight of business. I mean that there are countless governmental policies that directly affect business and the debate of the recent presidential campaign has awakened such widespread interest in general business that congress cannot avoid debate on the subject.

There are many members of the house and senate, including a goodly number of those lately elected or re-elected, who feel that the Washington government has been messing too much into the affairs of private business. They feel, and I believe with justification, that unless many of the government handicaps are withdrawn, unless many of the restrictions and the superfluous rules and regulations are removed, business cannot go ahead as it apparently would like to do.

It is said that many corporations would like to engage in plant expansion and increase their pay rolls by many thousands of workers but they are afraid to do so under present laws and policies. They cannot feel a sense of safety and corporate funds, after all, are just like many belonging to an individual. Those who manage it or own it will not invest it unless they can be assured of policies by the government at Washington that give them an equal chance, at least, to obtain a return on the money they invest. In other words, corporations are just like individuals who will not risk their money unless they have confidence that the odds are favorable to them.

Word came to me the other day through official channels to the effect that a gigantic and well-known corporation was ready to expand its whole productive capacity if it could be certain that federal tax laws were going to be revised so that they consisted of tax laws rather than tax penalties on business chances. The word was that this corporation expected to spend about one hundred forty-two millions; that the authorization for the work had been approved by the corporation's board of directors and that blue prints of the plans had been drawn. But all of this had been done upon a contingent basis.

You will say that this is an isolated case, and it is. But it is isolated only to the extent that I am not able to name names and identify directly hundreds of other corporations that are exactly in the same boat. To an extent, information that other corporations are following the same policy is hearsay; yet, I have every faith in the reports concerning general plans along these lines and I am firmly convinced of the sincerity of business managements generally to go ahead if the Washington government permits them to have confidence that they will not be destroyed by taxation later.

It seems to me there are three phases of federal government policies and laws that serve to retard business recovery. I mentioned taxation and government regulation or bureaucracy. There is a third It is the spending policies that have been followed and that have resulted in the enormous federal debt with a budget still unbalanced.

Spending Policies

I do not know which of the three is held to be the most important among business generally Regimentation and bureaucracy breed a fear in the minds of so many business leaders that as long as bureaucracy in Washington continues to be as widespread as it is, this segment of the business structure is going to remain quiescent. Another segment will do nothing in the way of expanding operations when the tax laws are taking such a tremendous toll and actually serve as an impelling force against the desires of business to increase its own revenue

The third factor of influence, that of government spending, throws a fear into the hearts of every business man. As long as the budget is unbalanced and spending, even wasting of money continues, there is an unsettling influence at work which keeps business interests from making new plans. The reason is that an unbalanced budget and wasteful expenditures constitute a continual threat of inflation. Especially is this true when the Chief Executive has the power to change the value of money.

The busness men, as far as my information goes, take the position that it is worse than useless for them to attempt to increase their production or mold plans regarding their business as long as they cannot feel sure that the value of the money they use will be the same tomorrow that it is today.

Frequently I have heard evidence substantiating the observations I have made above. These business interests provide the outlet for tremendous amounts of money now lying idle in banks. In other words, these business interests are the potential borrowers of billions of dollars that are not now being used and the fact that they are not borrowing this money simply cuts off the use of a very important force in our economic life.

Further, the fact that business is not borrowing money and engaging in expansion of production has the very vital result of preventing employment of labor. The American Federation of Labor announces that there are something like eleven millions of workers still unemployed. Yet, the question must be asked how or why business would want to do a better job in behalf of itself and help labor by employing additional workers at the same time when its own government continually harasses it in one way or another. No amount of criticism by those responsible in the government can force business to take a chance with its money. It must have a reasonable guarantee that its government will allow it to have at least a reasonable profit or else the money will continue to remain idle.

Undoubtedly, we will see a very great many bills popping around the capitol, bills designed to relieve business of this or the other handicap now believed to be hanging over it. The bulk of them will receive no consideration because the bulk of those bills will be loosely drawn and will be representative only of the desires of a particular segment of commerce or industry. But as the situation now appears we can expect to see something done about the tax laws in the forthcoming congress. It appears fairly certain to me, for example, that the ridiculous surplus earnings tax enacted by the last congress must be rewritten. Because the bulk of our business is handled by corporations, it ought to be important to give corporations consideration as a class. They had specific attention from the New Dealers and this despised corporation tax on surplus earnings was the vehicle upon which many of the nitwits among the New Dealers attempted to ride. Business, generally speaking, opposed enactment of the statute but business was not able to overcome the Roosevelt control in congress. Hence, the tax law was enacted and corporations are paying the penalty.

Expect Many Bills

But it might be asked whether anything better can be expected in this session of congress. The answer is that there are more members of the house and senate now who recognize that the competitive system of doing business always in operation in the United States heretofore should not be destroyed. It can be expected, therefore, that something will be done about that tax law and just as certainly, something will be done in a legislative way about the numerous rules and regulations that constantly interfere with the free transaction of business. These rules and regulations, of course, were drafted under authority given by congress but my conversations among house and senate leaders convince me that these men see the error of their previous enactments. They are willing to be somewhat more bold, coming as they do fresh from the elections. And they are rather likely to insist upon legislation which will help rather than hinder.

It may be, of course, that organized labor will be powerful enough to force consideration of legislation shortening all hours of labor. I do not know how it can be done because there is every evidence that such legislation would be unconstitutional It probably can be done by the state legislative bodies but not by the federal government. While, as I said, organized labor may force consideration of this sort of thing, there is little doubt in my mind that congress will stand out against enactments of this type, first, because of the apparent lack of constitutional support and, second, because it would constitute a further harassment of business during a period when everyone who is sane wants to see business get going again.

FLOYD GIBBONS' ADVENTURERS' CLUB

Hello Everybody

"U-Boat 151"

By FLOYD GIBBONS,

HERE'S a lad with an amazing story. He is Thomas P. Carey of Brooklyn, N. Y., and the experience he had was one at has happened to mighty few people in the world. Tom—American—had the rare thrill of cruising on a German sub-arine while it raided our shipping along the Atlantic coast.

That, of course, happened during the war. On May 22, 1918, Tom ipped as a seaman on the schooner Hattie Dunn, sailing out of Charles-n, S. C, bound for New York with a cargo of cotton.

The third day out, off the Virginia Capes, a submarine broke the surface of the water and fired a shot across the Hattie Dunn's bow. The skipper heaved to and dropped the topsail. Tom says that all that happened so quickly that, standing there on the Hattie's deck, he hardly realized that anything exciting was happening. He little dreamed he was about to start out on a great adventure.

Blew the Hattie Up in a Hurry.

The submarine swung a boat over the side and an officer and four rman sailors boarded the Hattie. Just then another schooner ap-ared on the horizon and bedlam broke loose. The sub's commander outed across the water to the searching party. The searching party dered the Hattie's crew into the lifeboats. Hurriedly a charge of NT was set off in the Hattie's innards, and as the Hattie went down, crew, in their boats, watched the submarine pursue and sink the cond schooner.

The second schooner was the Hauppage, bound for Portland, Maine. hen it was blown up, the sub came back. The crews of both schooners re herded aboard the undersea craft. Tom then learned that he was the German submarine U-151, commanded by a skipper named von stitz.

There were 17 prisoners aboard, but Tom was the only one who could speak German. "So I went to the skipper," Tom says, "and pleaded with him to set us adrift in the small boats. He refused to do it because he didn't want it known that a submarine was present in American waters. He told me he had a task to complete. He said he had planted 50 mines in Chesapeake bay, and had 50 more to plant in the mouth of the Delaware."

Trying Time for the Poor Prisoners.

At that time there was room enough aboard to accommodate all e prisoners without crowding. The ship submerged, and that was an easy moment for a lot of captured sailors who had never been under he water before. They hadn't been down long when the periscope watch sighted another schooner—the Edna, bound from Philadelphia to Santiago with a cargo of gasoline. That was captured and blown p and six more prisoners were taken aboard.

While Tom acted as interpreter, the commander questioned the newcomers. They assured him there was no news abroad of a sub-marine lurking in American waters. Tom says all of them gave Von Nostitz advice about the shore line. They knew only too well that their wn lives depended on his navigation. It was a trying time for the pris-oners, and their nerves were frayed to the breaking point. For in addi-ion to the hazards of living on a submarine which might be sunk any moment by an American battleship, they were remembering things they'd read in the papers—tales of subs that had shelled life-boats full of helpless men—of prisoners tortured, killed—of men shot up through torpedo tubes and left to drown in the empty ocean.

Still, the German crew seemed friendly and hospitable. They shared their bunks with the prisoners and made them as comfortable as possible under the circumstances. The U-151 was running toward Delaware bay, and at 9:15 that night the watch sighted Overfall lightship. Then, without warning the boat gave a terrific lurch.

Disabled by Striking Bottom.

The lurch took Tom completely off his feet. The boat bumped two or three times, then leaped toward the surface. There was general pandemonium aboard. The officers were yelling all kinds of orders. Some of the prisoners were praying, some yelling, while others were so stunned they couldn't move. The engineer cried, "She won't stay down. I can't control her." They had struck bottom and disabled the steering apparatus!

The ship was spinning around, helpless in an eddying current. Lights were looming up ahead, and any one of them might be an American pa-trol boat. A large steamer passed a few hundred feet away. Two more passed almost as closely. The current was pulling them toward the lightship. "We could hear its bell, and it sounded like a death knell to all of us," says Tom.

Down below, the crew was working with a fine frenzy. At last came the order to close the hatches and dive again. The break had been repaired.

They Cut Two Trans-Atlantic Cables.

The sub lay on the bottom for a few hours, then came up in a thick night fog to plant the remaining mines. At ten the next morning they were on the bottom again while the crew took a nap. That evening they set out for New York. On May 28, they were off Fire island, to cut the trans-Atlantic cables with a newly devised instrument. After two days' angling, they had cut two of them—one to South America and another to Europe.

From there the sub went back to Delaware bay, where it took the S. S. Winneconne and the schooner Isabel B. Wiley. The lifeboats of both ships were drawn alongside, and then it was that Commander von Nostitz told Tom the time had come for a friendly farewell. The prisoners put off in motor lifeboats, and landed at Lewes, Del., after eight days of captivity—eight days in which they witnessed—and lived through—a war-time epic of the sea.

We were all supposed to hate the Germans during the war, but Tom found it pretty hard to hate Commander von Nostitz. As a mat-ter of fact, he and Tom parted the best of friends, and to this day they keep up a correspondence. A war may separate a couple of nations—but there's nothing like a good adventure to bring them together.

Founding of Oxford

Traditionally, the founding of Oxford university was by Alfred the Great, about 871, but the authentic origin was the result of a quarrel between Henry II, and Thomas a Becket, about 1164, when the king forbade English clerks to study at Paris, and they returning, boomed the school at Oxford. The earliest document giving the school of Oxford the title of university was in 1201.

Swallows in Chinese Literature

There exists in Chinese literature no more fitting means of signifying family love and endearment than by mentioning the companionship tradition credits to the male and female swallow. Some of the folk-songs of old Peking and Shantung, says Nature Magazine, picture a young wife lamenting the loss of her mate at each fresh sight of the swallows flying about the country in pairs.

POULTRY FACTS

TURKEYS MUST BE PLUMP, FINISHED

Birds Marketed According to Their Grade.

By O. C. Ufford, Extension Poultryman, Colorado State College.—WNU Service.

In order to secure the best possible prices for turkeys when they are marketed, growers must have their birds well grown and finished, because over three-fourths of the annual turkey crop is marketed according to grades.

There is no class of live stock that makes as rapid or profitable gains as turkeys when they are properly fed. Since the final few pounds put on during the finishing period are the most expensive, it is more profitable to properly grow the young birds on a well-balanced ration and thus cut down the length of time required for finishing for the market

The following is a good growing mixture 25 pounds of fine yellow corn meal, 20 pounds of ground barley, 20 pounds of bran, 20 pounds of shorts or middlings, 15 pounds of meat scraps and 1 pound of salt Ground wheat may be substituted for either the shorts or middlings or the bran.

Plenty of green feed should be included with this ration Whenever milk is available it should be provided for the birds to drink along with the mash mixture Any available grains can be fed along with the above. An abundance of clean drinking water is important.

When a grower is feeding a well-balanced mixture during the growing period, very little special fattening will be necessary The finishing period should start 4 to 6 weeks before marketing time and no radical changes in the feeding program should be made.

To increase the fattening feed in the ration, add 100 pounds of ground yellow corn to 100 pounds of the growing mash and continue to keep this before the flock, allowing them to eat what they desire

The grain ration, especially corn can be increased. Do not attempt to feed grains that the birds have not been used to Whole or rolled barley is an excellent grain to add to the fattening ration. If the flock has been allowed unlimited range, do not closely confine it for fattening.

It will require about 3 and one-half to 4 pounds of feed to produce 1 pound of gain during the growing period, and from 6 to 7 pounds of feed for 1 pound of gain at finishing time.

Pen Fattened Broilers Require Ration of Corn

Pen fattening of poultry, especially broilers, is a bit more simple than crate fattening, according to a writer in Hoard's Dairyman. Corn, rather than milk, is the important fattening feed. About 30 broilers are given a space of two square feet each. The ration is made up of 50 pounds yellow corn meal, 20 pounds white wheat middlings, 10 pounds ground heavy oats, and 20 pounds meat scraps. This is mixed with water—2 quarts of feed to one and one half quarts of water and fed two or three times daily.

This system of feeding is best where the birds must be shipped.

Crate fattening where milk is used is advisable where broilers are to be marketed close to home. Birds are put in crates. 6 to 10 of them in a space 24 by 24 by 20. They are starved for 24 hours, then fed sparingly for two days. They are then fed two or three times daily a moist feed, all they will clean up in 20 minutes, made up from the following: 50 pounds yellow corn, 20 pounds wheat middlings, and 10 pounds, heavy oats mixed with milk, 1 quart of skimmilk or buttermilk to 1 quart of mash.

The fattening period is from 10 to 14 days. Birds should be closely watched and those showing lack of appetite taken off feed quickly.

Poultry Cullings

New York raises more ducks than does any other state.

Electric stoves and other supposed luxuries are helpful in poultry brooding houses.

Most poultrymen begin to use artificial light in late summer but discontinue it late in the fall so the hens can molt before cold weather and rest before the next laying or breeding season.

The Hebrews and ancient Irish used the hen's egg as their unit of measure of capacity.

Chick rations should contain more tissue and bone building material than those for older birds.

Poultry and eggs brought considerably over fifty million dollars to the farmers of Canada last year.

One chicken weighing around four pounds will give enough meat for one quart of chicken salad.

Reminiscence

The scenery one remembers most fondly will be what he saw while sitting serenely in contemplative meditation.

Culture also consists in knowing what not to cultivate.

A hard-shelled man doesn't necessarily mean a hard-boiled one.

The way of the transgressor is hard, but apparently not half hard enough, or there wouldn't be so many repeaters

But They're Not Assets

A man of bitter and glittering words may not have many friends but he has hosts of envious admirers.

If science knew how to produce a genius, it would produce too many.

Everything in nature goes by steps, nothing by leaps.

A good deal of common sense consists in just simply not butting in.

Probably your wants are as twenty to one to your needs.

Good society wants good morals, and whenever they can't be, wants them kept out of sight.

Greatest triumph is to fish your friend out of the blues and make him laugh again.

Inward Beauty

WHO has not experienced how, on near acquaintance, plainness becomes beautified and beauty loses its charm, exactly according to the quality of the heart and mind? And from this cause am I of opinion that the want of outward beauty never disquiets a noble nature or will be regarded as a misfortune. It never can prevent people from being amiable and beloved in the highest degree.

Justice consists in doing no injury to men; decency, in giving them no offence.—Cicero.

EVERY car owner who does much driving over unimproved roads and who has to use chains, can save the cost and bother of applying them by equipping the rear wheels of his car or truck with Firestone Ground Grip Tires. This wonderful new tire was designed and developed by Harvey S. Firestone working with his engineers on his own farm in Columbiana County, Ohio. It was tested on all kinds of roads and found so efficient that it was also adopted for tractors and all wheeled farm implements.

The rubber lugs of the tread are so placed that they clean as they pull, and since the design is continuous, the tire does not bump when used on paved roads. Two extra layers of Gum-Dipped cords are placed under the tread — a patented Firestone construction feature which welds the powerful super-traction tread to the patented Gum-Dipped cord body, making them one inseparable unit. Gum-Dipping is used only in Firestone tires.

Farmers, country doctors, school bus operators, rural mail carriers, in fact, all who do most of their driving off the paved roads cannot afford to be without Ground Grip Tires. Go to your nearest Firestone Dealer or Firestone Auto Supply and Service Store today and equip your car or truck with Firestone Ground Grip Tires — the tire that makes its own road.

"BAD BOY PROBLEM" WAS SOLVED BY DETROIT CLUB

Like all other cities, Detroit had its bad boy problem From the juvenile court records it appeared that in a recent year one out of every eight boys from 17 to 19 years of age had been arrested Detroit led all other big cities in juvenile delinquency

Then a number of citizens took notice of the situation and organized the Boy's Club of Detroit. A four-story building was fitted up with lockers, showers, games, and workshops and the like, and the boys were invited to make themselves at home The membership now numbers nearly 4,000.

These boys are drawn from the class which formerly roamed the streets, engaging in all sorts of deviltry Now they spend much time in their club, playing games or in building radios, airplane models, toys and many useful articles. A specialty is making toy for crippled children, craftsmanhip going hand in hand with social education.

Members of the club seldom appear before the juvenile court any more With suitable outlets for their energies they do not find it necessary to engage in anti-social activities. Great good has been accomplished through the initiative of a group of forward looking citizens who did no believe that the "bad" boy was as bad as he seemed to be And results have proved that they were right.

For beating his mother-in-law with his wooden leg, Stephen W. Flood of Belfast was sent to prison for one month

DO YOU REMEMBER?

The first game law in Iowa was enacted in Iowa in 1857.

In 1868 a law was passed to encourage tree planting in Iowa. It exempted $100 assessed valuation for tax purposes for every acre of forest trees and $50 for every acre of fruit trees.

The office of the first fish and game commission was established in 1874.

In 1909 a law was passed which required the first hunting license of Iowa residents who desired to hunt. The cost was $1.

WATCH FOR GAME AREA SIGNS

Conservation officers are asking hunters to observe Game Management Area signs when hunting this season. Hunting is not prohibited on these areas, but permission to trespass or hunt must be granted by the landowner. It is necessary under the Game Management law for the hunter to go to the farmer's house and obtain permission to enter upon the land. The hunter is required to have his permit with him while hunting and the permit will be the hunter's authority when checked by a Conservation officer.

NEW MEXICO'S GYPSUM

The White Sands of Alamogordo.

Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.

AS ONE stands upon the heights of the San Andres mountains in the neighborhood of Rhodes Pass, New Mexico, one looks out upon an ocean of white. South and east stretches a vast sea on which the glint of whitecaps appears as real as the rocky shores. The view is a startling mirage. Closer inspection reveals that the billowing snowy expanse is the White Sands of Alamogordo.

The windrowlike dunes seem velvety in their softness, yet many of them are firm enough to permit motorists to roll their cars from one crest to the next in roller-coaster fashion. Some of the hills have attained a height of 100 feet, but 50 feet probably represents the average.

Curious stories of the origin of the sands have circulated since they have been known to Americans, but the truth is not less interesting than the fanciful explanations. The processes of making are going on constantly.

Underlying the Tularosa basin are beds of Permian limestone and sandstone, between the layers of which are interspersed thick beds of gypsum. Borings made in recent years reveal that the gypsum is hundreds of feet below the present valley floor and that water is encountered at depths of a thousand feet or less.

The nature of the sedimentary rocks above the water-bearing sands is favorable to upward seepage. As the water on its upward course passes through the gypsum deposits, it dissolves that material and carries a rather full load to the surface. The limestone through which the solution passes is not readily soluble; very little in addition to gypsum is carried by the rising water. When evaporation takes place at the surface a fairly pure crust of gypsum is deposited, which, under action of the atmosphere, crumbles to form crystalline grains.

The prevailing southwest wind sweeps these crystals from the surface upon which they were formed and piles them in huge drifts to the north and east of the point of origin. The wind erosion excavates basins, the flat floors of which may be 10 to 30 feet below the surface of the plain and 50 feet or more below the tops of the dunes.

Basins of Moist Sands.

Nearly everywhere in the basin floors moist sands are encountered at a depth of a few inches. Ordinarily sand erosion does not develop flat surfaces, but the flatness of these floors is manifestly caused by the water table which limits the depth to which the sand erosion can go.

The largest of the basins from which the sands are blown is a boggy lake bed at the south end of the dune area, but many of the smaller flat-floored depressions are scattered through the area. The size of the depression appparently affects the height of the sand piles built up to the lee of it.

Hills and mountains surrounding the Tularosa basin contain gypsum, and it is evident that some of the deposit is brought from this source by surface waters that feed it to the large natural evaporation pan at the south end of the sands. Whether the source is the deeply buried beds or the visible deposits in the mountains, the processes of evaporation, crumbling, and drifting with the wind are the same. The end product is invariably beautiful, white, winnowed, and clean.

The picture afforded in this expanse of white sand is unlike anything known. The white environment has produced a notable effect upon the limited animal life of the sands, and zoologists look to this natural laboratory for possible answers to questions bearing upon adaptation. Botanists long ago turned to the White Sands as a field in which to study the responses of plants to unusual physical influences.

In places large cottonwood trees nearly covered up with sand live a strange existence, producing roots where upper branches once grew. When the sand drifts and exposes their modified anatomy, they still stand, amazing specimens, with roots interspersed with dead branches along trunks that have been changed as a result of long burial.

"Red Lakes" Come and Go.

Disinterred specimens of the yucca are to be seen that have struggled in an effort to keep their heads above the shifting sands until their stems have elongated to some thirty feet.

For several years the appearance and disappearance of "red lakes" in the sands have caused conjecture among biologists and chemists. Studies made during the last few months have tentatively identified an organism which may be responsible for the strange color hanges that take place in the waters of certain ponds and pools. Apparently the vermilion "lakes" can exist only when the water has evaporated to a condition of high salt content, for the organism is known to grow only in salt water of high concentration.

Sites once occupied by an ancient people are well known to the present residents of the region, and obscure reminders of early Spanish activity are to be seen in many places throughout the valley.

Three centuries ago Spanish explorers and missionaries frequented the Tularosa desert and wondered at its white sands. They noted the unusual chemical properties of the nearly 300 square miles of drifting gypsum and, quite likely, wished for means of transporting this abundant supply of pure alabaster to the settlements and churches a hundred miles to the north.

Recently, at the mouth of Deadman canyon in the San Andres, just west of the White Sands, a prominent son of the state of New Mexico uncovered unmistakable evidences that the Spanish Americans of a generation long dead had entered the Tularosa desert area with vehicles. Divulgence of this forgotten travel came in the form of two massive wooden wheels from an early Mexican oxcart.

If an authentic story could be woven about those relics, perhaps the period of the bullwhacker who abandoned his conveyance would be established as no earlier than the Nineteenth century. However, maps of the padres and dons definitely point to Eighteenth century routes east and west across the Tularosa as well as north and south, where the trails parallel the mountain boundaries of its basin.

Many Uses for Gypsum.

The value of these sands for plaster of paris and fireproofing material is well recognized, and repeated attempts have been made to make commercial use of them.

Gypsum finds a multitude of uses in commerce and industry. As a fertilizer and soil conditioner it is distributed as "agricultural gypsum." As "mineral white" it finds use as a filler in paper, paint and fabrics. The makers of Portland cement require it as a retarder. In sculpture and the making of decorative devices in architecture and building it is known as "alabaster." Even the school boys' crayons utilize much gypsum.

When natural gypsum is dehydrated by heat, it becomes the quick - setting cement known as "plaster of paris." About four million tons of this calcined gypsum are used each year for wall plaster or stucco. Plate - glass makers imbed their glass in plaster of paris preparatory to polishing.

Plasterboard, wallboard and gypsum lath all require much gypsum each year. "Gypsum blocks" and tile are used in partitions, roof construction, and flooring, where fireproofing and sound insulation are important. Surgeons, dentists, and artists demand the finer grades of calcined gypsum for making casting plaster.

Dreaded By Pioneers.

It appears on first thought that here in the nearly pure gypsum of White Sands is a veritable fortune in plaster. But Tularosa is far removed from large markets.

Old settlers of the region have watched, feared, and hated the White Sands for half a century This, one of the world's greatest deposits of pure gypsum, has grown before their eyes, threatening homes and land that might be useful.

These pioneers—cattlemen, sheepmen, farmers, and lumbermen—had few interests outside their own business. The spreading sands, ever increasing in volume, struck dread into the stockman, who came to believe that the snowy-white mass would creep upon and envelop not only his ranch, but the towns of Alamogordo and Tularosa—now 15 to 20 miles from the heavy white sea.

With the increase in population in the little cities about the basin there came the realization that the alabaster dunes provided charming sites for church picnics, school parties, and lodge gatherings. Intimate and happy association with the sands caused fear to turn to love and pride. In 1930 the communities of Alamogordo, Las Cruces, El Paso, Carlsbad, Artesia, Roswell, Mescalero, Ruidoso, Cloudcroft, and Tularosa joined forces in an effort to create a national reservation in the White Sands.

EMBLEMS

IF YOU live in a state where they still allow party emblems on the ballot, take a look at them as you mark yours. That eagle soaring above the clouds at the top of the Republican column should remind you of Gen. John C. Fremont, who was the first Republican candidate for President back in 1856. It may be reminiscent of the eagles which he saw when he was "The Pathfinder" in the West or it may mean that the Republicans have been in power so long during the last 80 years that they figure they have a better right than any other party to claim the national bird.

That lordly crowing rooster at the head of the Democratic column should remind you of Joseph Chapman of Indiana whose habit of crowing over Democratic victories a century ago resulted in this symbol for his party

That rising sun, with its beams glinting over an ocean, as though foretelling the day when there will be "Water, water everywhere, but not a drop to drink" tells you that below it are the names of the candidates on the Prohibition ticket. Those hands clasped against a background of the earth tell of the Socialists' dream of greater equality for mankind all over the earth. That stout bare arm with the hammer in hand speaks for the Labor party and that sickle and hammer remind you that the Communists would have us follow the example of Soviet Russia

There was once a time when a Bull Moose snorted defiance at the top of one column on the ballot. That was when Theodore Roosevelt was seeking a third term under the Progressive banner but since 1912 the Bull Moose has been an extinct political animal.

Or course, if you live in a state where they use voting machines the emblems may be slightly different

The reason for these emblems on the ballot is a practical one, besides their symbolical significance. In the early days they were placed there to aid voters who had left their spectacles at home and who didn't want to vote for the wrong candidates by mistake. When the tides of immigration began pouring into the country millions of foreigners who were illiterate, even after naturalization, these emblems were helpful to them in their voting. As new parties arose the use of these symbols helped avoid confusion and even though many efforts have been made to do away with them, they are still in widespread use

HISTORY REPEATS ITSELF

IF EVER there was a case of "history repeats itself" in American politics it was illustrated in the careers of Henry Clay and James G. Blaine. Separated by half a century, those careers were almost exact duplicates of near achievement and ultimate disaster. There were other resemblances also.

Both men were magnetic in personality, eloquent in speech and idolized by their followers. Both were master politicians and dominated the councils of their parties but both fell victims to a political enemy whose fateful vengeance followed them all through their days of striving for the presidency. Andrew Jackson was Clay's Nemesis; Roscoe Conkling was Blaine's.

Early in his career Blaine recognized his similarity to Clay. When Grover Cleveland, then comparatively unknown, was nominated by the Democrats in 1884, Blaine had a premonition of defeat. "I am the Henry Clay of the Republican party,' he declared to a friend. "Clay was defeated in two conventions when he could have been elected, and he was nominated for President when his competitor was elected. That competitor (Polk) was one who had not been publicly discussed as a presidential candidate before the meeting of the Baltimore convention in 1844. I was defeated in two conventions when I could have been elected. I am nominated now with a competitor alike obscure with the competitor of Clay."

Then he shook his head and murmured sadly, "1844—1884!"

His premonition of defeat was a true one. Cleveland, the unknown, beat him in 1884 just as Polk, the unknown, beat Clay in 1844.

So among all the "also-rans" of American political history Henry Clay of Kentucky and James G. Blaine of Maine come down to us as the "really epic figures that stand out as tragic personifications of forlorn hopes."

Sacred Foot Print

A simple impression in a rock on Adam's Peak in Ceylon—five feet by two feet and shaped like a human foot—is sacred to a third of the world's population. The 175,000,000 Buddhists claim it was made by Buddha, the 250,000,000 Hindus maintained it was made by their god Siva and the 250,000,000 Mohammedans assert that it was made by Adam when he stood there, on one foot for 200 years, to expiate his crime in the Garden of Eden. —Collier's Weekly.

The Souls of Oysters
In the Coffin, He Pays
Polly Has a Tombstone
Suicide Is Folly

Mr. Kokichi Mikimoto, able Japanese gentleman, once a peddler of noodles, is now gigantically rich, thanks to his oyster pearl idea. He makes real pearls by forcing the oyster to work at pearl production. Instead of diving for oysters, hoping to find one with a pearl in it, he puts little, irritating grains of sand inside the shells of millions of oysters, and each oyster proceeds to deposit the pearly substance on the sand to escape its irritating scratching.

Arthur Brisbane

These pearls are "real." Although experts can tell the difference, they annoy jewelers and have hurt the value of the other accidental pearls, but they make it unnecessary for the unfortunate pearl diver to "go all naked to the hungry shark," as the poet has it. Mr. Mikimoto has been obliged to kill hundreds of millions of oysters, which is serious: his Buddhist religion teaches that each has its little separate soul—in fact, the soul of his great-grandmother might have resided in one of the oysters.

An American who recently died left a fortune of between twenty-five and thirty million dollars, chiefly in tax-exempt securities on which the owner, while he lived, paid no income tax. Now that he is dead, inheritance taxes will take about two-thirds of the many millions.

The lack of a "dead-or-alive" tax-exempt securities offers opportunity to some able lawyer. If the government has no constitutional right to take any income from tax-exempt bonds, how can it legally take half merely because the owner is in his coffin?

A green parrot, with red tipped wings, buried in a respectable grave, will have a granite headstone with "Here lies Polly Coddington, sixty-eight years old," engraved on it. Exactly how old Polly was, no one knows. Born in Brazil, she was presented to the grandmother of Mrs. Joseph E. Hunt, sixty-eight years ago. Parrots, like eagles, elephants and other intelligent creatures that eat wisely, often pass one hundred.

A higher race thinks up foolish things for itself.

Gruesome details which no one seems to have put into a movie or a horror story are published in connection with a recent suicide. The unfortunate victim, convinced that life was not worth while, hanged himself, and then, still conscious, found he was mistaken and made desperate unsuccessful efforts to cut the rope.

Those that think of suicide should remember that they must leave the world soon in any case, and might as well remain to see what will happen. While there is life, there is hope.

Chiang Kai-Shek, dictator of the Nanking government, warns China, "No nation can ruin us unless we first ruin ourselves," emphasizing the fact that the short road to national ruin is neglect of preparation for war. Some patriotic American "radio sponsor" might arrange to broadcast that talk in Washington, D. C. We need it here almost as much as China needs it.

England fears that quarrels among union men may cause strikes in airplane factories and delay Britain's effort to get ready for her next war. Such strikes would probably bring welcome orders for planes to American factories; nevertheless, it is only fair to remind British workers, quarreling among themselves, that when foreign bombs begin dropping on their families any strike against national safety will seem to have been foolish, in retrospect. And those words, "chiefly women and children," should be remembered.

Borrowed money is cheaper, and it ought to be, since the dollar is only worth 59 cents. A cheap house or cheap dollar should bring a cheap rent. Even so, it surprises you to learn that Mayor LaGuardia borrowed from J. P. Morgan & Co. thirty million dollars for the city, spread over a five-year period, for one and one-tenth per cent interest.

Here, Myron C. Taylor, head of "Big Steel," greatest steel company in the world, announces increases in wages, also rusumption of full dividend payments on the preferred United States Steel stock, also earnings in three months of more than thirteen million dollars, biggest in six years. Thirteen million dollars in three months may not be "big money," but "it is better than being hit on the head with a sharp stone."

Today's "Heroes of Civilization"

Courage and resourcefulness, in the line of duty or otherwise, seem confined to no particular class, race or age.

Many years ago, George Bernard Shaw said, "The courage to rage and kill is cheap. My bulldog has it, but he lets the groom beat him all the same." Military courage may not be precisely "cheap," but it certainly seems less fine than the behavior of what Carnegie called "the heroes of civilization." It is one thing to go over the top with the band playing—metaphorically, at least — and another to go over alone, without incentive outside of the job that is to be done and without thought of glory.—Channing Pollock in Cosmopolitan Magazine.

We wish to thank these many loyal friends for the business you have given us during those 24 years, and at the same time we say "Goodbye and Good Luck" to the old friends and customers as we step from our store

We also want to take this opportunity to introduce to you Mr. Earl Stott, the new proprietor. We know you will like Mr and Mrs. Stott and we ask our old friends and customers to call at the store and get acquainted with these fine folks.

And, again thanking everybody for their many kindnesses shown us during the many years we have been in business in Klemme,

Thanksgiving Day

No doubt the same old question will be asked that we have so often heard What have we to be thankful for? The question is foolish, almost as foolish as the attempts toanswer it

Thanksgiving means gratitude and there is probably no man alive who does not hold ingratitude to be one of the blackest sins Of course there can be no gratitude except is it is shown not only for something but to someone Therefore observes a writer in the Indianapolis News it is that the thought of Thanksgiving necessarily implies the existence of a Divine Giver and Benefactor So we are bidden to return thanks to Almighty God as "the Giver of every good and perfect gift When there seems to be a scarcity of gifts one is tempted to ask the question why be thankful? And that is a question which every one must answer for himself, and it will be answered as it has always been, in many different ways It is futile to catalogue what we know to be blessings and what we believe to be anything but blessings, and set off one list against the other and be thankful in proportion as the good exceeds the evil

Carlyle long ago showed us the folly of the bookkeeping method as applied to things spiritual Probably most people get out of life about what they deserve and in proportion to what they put into it It seems to be true that the most thankful people are those who have the least On the other hand, those who are surfeited with good things take them as matters of course, as their due and so calling for no gratitude The question seems to be whether one has a thankful spirit, which surely is something to be greatly desired

Without it, man is less than man Even beasts are grateful Practically the question suggested by the day touches character There is nothing mechanical or formal about it One cannot pump up thankfullness or the setting apart of a day does not suggest that there should be such an attempt The day is rather a recognition, less of a duty than of an opportunity which it would be or might be fatal to neglect "Be ye thankful" is an apostolic command It ought to be easy to obey Those men are nearest the truth who feel that of this life nothing is due them, and that whatever they get is in a very true sense a gift, and one which runs far beyond their deserts So we are called to keep another Thanksgiving day which should bring an outpouring of not only thankful but kindly hearts

Motorists Asked To Stop For School Crossings

HIGH SCHOOL NEWS

Two of the new stop signs have been put up on the boundaries of the school grounds. They were made by Mr Jost and Harold Jost They look very much like the regular highway signs. It is hoped that everyone will observe the signal and come to a complete stop at the school crossing

We neglected to mention last week that the new bass horn had arrived A case is being made for it, and it will be put into regular use as soon as Dwaine Johnson or some other husky boy can learn to balance it and toot it at the same time.

New regulations for noon hour supervision went into effect this week Teachers will be in charge of both upper and lower halls thru out the noon hour now.

The books in the shcool library are being repaired and cataloged. When the work is completed, our library can be operated under much the same system as a college or city library.

Grades 1 and 2

We have new Thanksgiving posters in our room.

One day we made up Thanksgiving poems. We will keep them in our Poem book.

The Second graders have new readers and workbooks.

There is a flower on our Narcissus plant. We hope the other two bulbs will bloom also.

Grades 3 and 4

Characters for the lower grades operetta, "The Toys That Had To Wait," were chosen this week. The operetta is to be given in December.

The fourth graders are making a "Congo Dictionary" during Language class. Writing original definitions of words, arranging words alphabetically, and correct spelling are stressed in this type of work.

Our Reading Chart is beginning to show that interest in reading books is gaining. Each time a child reads a complete book and makes a written report on the book, he has a miniature book pasted beside his name on the chart. Sometimes a further check-up is given by having the child give an oral report. Marjorie Hartbeck gave an oral book report Thursday Ruth Bell and Mavis Meyers are leading in the number of books read by third graders. Wesley Suckow is leading in the fourth grade.

Next week begins a new phase of work in both arithmetic classes The third graders begin multiplication and the fourth grade begins long division

The following people earned a rating of 100 in spelling this week: Patricia Kudje, Junior Bunten-Carol Bock and Ruth Bell.

We have completed our seed notebooks We shall keep them on display in our room for awhile and then take them home.

Several of the boys and girls have brought books of their own from home and have put them in our library They are permitting us to use them until the end of the school year. We thank these people kindly.

Grades 7 and 8

This week we have reviewed our work and taken six weeks tests.

The seventh grade is planning a program to entertain the eighth grade, because they were the losers in a spelling contest. Those who received 100 in spelling this week are: Fritz Gobeli, Shirley Johnson, Jacqueline Kudje, Keith, Stille and Melvin Coobs.

Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Cook drove to Alden on business last week.

KLEMME HIGH SCHOOL SPLIT BILL AT CORWITH FRIDAY

Shamrocks Win 46-20 While Reserves Lose By Two Buckets

Coach A L. Kingery took his basketball teams to Corwith last Friday night for the first game of the season

The Little Shamrocks and the Corwith Reserves put up a good game that was even throughout until Corwith merged ahead in the last quarter to defeat the Little Shamrocks 24 to 20 Following is the box score of the curtain raiser:

| Little Shamrocks—20 | FG | FT | F | TP |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| Trampel, f | 1 | 0 | 1 | 2 |
| Lemke, f | 5 | 0 | 4 | 10 |

| Totals | 10 | 4 | 9 | 24 |

The Shamrocks displayed a strong scoring machine against the Corwith regulars when they took the game 46 to 24, taking an early lead and increasing the margin in each quarter.

This first non-conference game gave Coach Kingery an opportunity to see what the squad could do "under fire" An entirely different style of play is being used this year and the game Friday night proved that it should be successful.

The scoring was fairly even among the Shamrocks, and their shooting was the most accurate of any team that Klemme has developed Out of forty-three attempts, the Shamrocks laced twenty-one counters through the net—and that is basket shooting on anybody's team.

Corwith has a good team, but lack experience. Kingery used all of his reserves in the last quarter of the tussle. Following is the box score

M. E. LADIES AID WILL HAVE ANNUAL BAZAAR, DEC. 8TH

The members of the Ladies Aid Society of the Methodist Church, will hold their annual bazaar and chicken supper on Tuesday, Dec. 8. Originally planned for Dec first, the executive board decided on Dec. 8, in order to give all members more time to get their fancy work and aprons completed, and also give the entertainment committee more time for planning a splendid program.

The selling of the fancy work will start at three o'clock in the afternoon and supper will be served at 5:30, until all have eaten. A program will follow the supper hour. Thirty-five and twenty-five cents will be charged for the supper.

Remember the dates and plan on coming and purchase articles for Christmas gifts. The children will get a big kick out of the "fish pond" and buying good homemade candy. Everyone should plan to eat supper with the Aid that night.

The Gifts Renewed

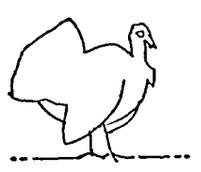
In fields but lately seared by summer's drought,
Where famine seemed to lay its withering hand,
A miracle has come to still our doubt
And spread a glad Thanksgiving through the land.

Unseen beneath the drab brown coat she wore,
The soil grew rich to nurture other seeds.
Then autumn rains released the hidden store
In verdant growths, to fill our winter needs.



So, God of Wisdom, may we learn to build
In quiet faith, through even darkest days;
Assured our destiny will be fulfilled
Through Thy inscrutable and wondrous ways.

Dwight Pennington, in Kansas City Times

Why we have Thanksgiving Turkey

THREE times a year, at Thanksgiving, Christmas and New Year's, the people of the United States advance upon a certain huge golden bronze fowl, cut its throat, strip it of its plumage and convert it into a savory dish which fairly makes the old table groan under the extra burden. Since we have raised this bird into a national significance which parallels to an almost equal degree that of the eagle, symbol of the government itself, it has a special interest to all Americans. Although many folks may still be "as poor as Job's turkey," says a writer in Pathfinder Magazine, they somehow manage and contrive to have turkey for Thanksgiving, whether they can or cannot afford it.

In years gone by those families who could not afford turkey turned to chicken, duck, beef, rabbit, or even pork and were glad to get it.

But now let's get back to the question of why we have or try to have or would like to have or imagine we would like to have turkey for Thanksgiving dinner The answer of course is that the turkey is strictly an American bird and serving it at feasts of thanksgiving is an old and ancient American custom Some authorities will tell you that we eat turkey on Thanksgiving day because after the first harvest in the fall of 1621 the Pilgrim Fathers at Plymouth set aside a period for feasting and offering thanks. To provide food for this feast hunters were sent out by Governor Bradford and they returned with a large supply of game. Hospitality was extended to the Indians, 91 of whom attended the festival which lasted for three days. Conspicuous among the game on the tables were numerous wild turkeys, then common in the woods of Massachusetts. From this circumstance, they say, arose the popular association of these birds with thanksgiving days.

This of course is the true origin of the custom so far as white man has been concerned with it. But the origin of turkey feasts goes back much farther. The millions of families who plan on enjoying hearty Thanksgiving turkey dinners this year will in reality be observing a custom that prevailed ages before the Pilgrims first gathered around their festive board in New England. Smithsonian institution records now bridge the years that veil the aboriginal civilizations and show that the Indians of the Southwest domesticated turkeys and fattened them for their ceremonial feasts. While the Pilgrim Fathers, grateful for good harvests and a year of prosperity in the New World decided on a day of thanksgiving to be celebrated at a banquet of roast turkey, really gave posterity the spirit of thanksgiving, the practice of such feasts had been established long before by the cliff dwellers who actually got their birds from a pen as we do today and not from a thicket as the Pilgrims did.

According to Smithsonian records the turkey of the aboriginal Indians more nearly approximated the

When the Festive Bird Goes Into the Oven.

Thanksgiving turkey of today than the scrawny wild fowl felled by the blunderbuss of the Pilgrim huntsman. Most of our domesticated varieties of turkeys today are really descended from the Mexican wild turkey ,that ranged over Arizona, western New Mexico and southern Colorado — virtually the dooryard of earliest American civilization. The Pilgrim turkey was merely the wild variety of the same bird which roamed the eastern part of the United States.

Just as the turkey was exclusively an American bird in the time of the aboriginal Indians, so it is today No fowl from any foreign country approximates it. In fact, wherever turkeys are raised today, and they have been introduced to many foreign countries, the ancestral stock came from America. And so far as is known turkeys are never imported to this country. Contrary to popular opinion the turkey did not get its name from Turkey (the country of that name). The first turkeys taken from the New World (America) and sold in Spain were handled largely by Hebrew merchants. Since the turkey was frequently confused with the peacock it was quite natural that the Hebrew trades should apply to it their name for the peacock, or "tukki." More or less common use of this name followed, which easily became in English our present name "turkey."

THE JUDGE SAYS:

"THANKSGIVING is approaching — it's time we told ourselves over and over again the things about which we should be thankful. There are plenty of those things. But, most important of all, I think, is the chance given to make ourselves happy again."—Judge Harry B. Keidan.

Thanksgiving Day

NO DOUBT the same old question will be asked that we have so often heard — what have we to be thankful for? The question is foolish, almost as foolish as the attempts to answer it Thanksgiving means gratitude, and there is probably no man alive who does not hold ingratitude to be one of the blackest sins. Of course, there can be no gratitude except as it is shown not only for something but to some one. Therefore, observes a writer in the Indianapolis News, it is that the thought of Thanksgiving necessarily implies the existence of a Divine Giver and Benefactor. So we are bidden to return thanks to Almighty God as "the Giver of every good and perfect gift." When there seems to be a scarcity of gifts one is tempted to ask the question, why be thankful? And that is a question which every one must answer for himself, and it will be answered as it always has been, in different ways. It is futile to catalogue what we know to be blessings and what we believe to be anything but blessings, and set off one list against the other, and be thankful in proportion as the good exceeds the evil.

Carlyle long ago showed us the folly of the bookkeeping method as applied to things spiritual. Probably most people get out of life about what they deserve and in proportion to what they put into it. It seems to be true that the most thankful people are those who have the least. On the other hand, those who are surfeited with good things take them as matters of course, as their due, and so calling for no gratitude The question seems to be whether one has a thankful spirit, which surely is something to be greatly desired.

Without it, man is less than man. Even beasts are grateful. Practically, the question suggested by the day touches character. There is nothing mechanical or formal about it One can not pump up thankfulness, and the setting apart of a day does not suggest that there should be such an attempt. The day is rather a recognition, less of a duty than of an opportunity which it would be or might be fatal to neglect. "Be ye thankful" is an apostolic command. It ought to be easy to obey. Those men are nearest the truth who feel that in this life nothing is due them, and that whatever they get is in a very true sense a gift, and one which may be far beyond their deserts. So we are called to keep another Thanksgiving day, which should bring an outpouring of not only thankful but kindly hearts. Appropriate to the day is Pope's well-known verse:

Teach me to feel another's woe,
To hide the fault I see;
That mercy I to others show,
That mercy show to me.

Tales and Traditions from American Political History

BY FRANK E. HAGEN AND ELMO SCOTT WATSON

INSURGENTS

FORMATION of the Union party for this year's campaign and its nomination of Representative William Lemke of North Dakota for President recalls some of the other "insurgent" parties which have played their part in our political history. The first of these was the Peace party of 1812-15, composed of Democrat-Republicans and Federalists, mostly in New England, who opposed the War of 1812

In 1824 there was a People's party, composed of Democrat-Republicans, who favored choosing electors by the people and in 1825 there was a Coalition party, so-called from the union of the supporters of Henry Clay with those of John Quincy Adams to elect Adams. There was an Anti-Masonic party in the field from 1827 to 1834 and in 1840-41 the Abolitionists formed the Liberty party. The Free Soil party, which later became the modern Republican party, was formed of Liberty party members, Whigs and Democrats, who opposed slavery.

The American party, popularly known as the "Know-Nothing party" was formed from members of other parties who became dissatisfied with the influx of foreigners and first raised the cry of "America for Americans!" In 1860 it was merged with the Constitutional party.

In this same year there were two Democratic parties—the Douglas Democrats (Northern) and the Breckenridge Democrats (Southern). In 1872 dissatisfied Republicans and pro-war Democrats formed the Liberal Republican party and nominated Horace Greeley for President Other Democrats who wouldn't vote for Greeley, formed the "Straight Out" or "Tap Root" Democratic party, which nominated Charles O'Conor.

In 1884 there was an Anti-Monopoly party which nominated Benjamin F. Butler of Massachusetts but which died a-borning. In that same year "bolters" from the Republican party who refused to support Blaine, the nominee, became the "Mugwumps" and supported Cleveland, the Democratic nominee. In 1896 there were "bolters" from both parties. Free silver advocates, led by Senator Teller of Colorado, left the Republican party, and "gold Democrats" deserted that party and its nominee, William J. Bryan, formed a "National Democrat" party and nominated two former Civil war generals—John M Palmer of Illinois for President and Simon B. Buckner of Kentucky for vice-president.

Last but not least was the split in the Republican party in 1912 which resulted in the formation of the Progressive party under the leadership of Theodore Roosevelt and the consequent victory of Wilson over Taft.

THE SALEM WITCHES PARADE

IF, IN 1888, you had read in the papers this headline: "Salem Witches to Parade for Harrison Tonight," you would probably have rubbed your eyes to make sure that you weren't seeing double and mixing up Seventeenth and Nineteenth century history into an amazing anachronism But the fact is that the Salem Witchers did march for Harrison in 1838 and for the next 20 years they were a striking feature of many a campaign torchlight procession in Massachusetts and other states.

The Salem Witches were members of three militia units who dressed up in a uniform consisting of a Mother Hubbard dress with a white yoke on which was displayed pictures of Harrison and Morton, the Republican presidential and vice-presidential nominees, and a skirt of red, white and blue stripes dotted with stars. A scarlet cape, worn with one-half thrown back over the shoulder, was another striking feature and with it was worn a poke bonnet with a high crown. Each of the "girls" carried a broom torch

At about the time the Salem Witches campaign battalion was organized in Salem, Republicans in Haverhill, Mass., organized the Brother Jonathans Members of these two clubs became great friends and it was their practice to "double up" after the parade had proceeded a short distance with each "Brother Jonathan" gallantly escorting a "Salem Witch."

Many and varied have been the marching clubs which took part in torchlight parades in campaign years but there has never been a more striking one than the "Salem witches" of the campaign of 1888.

First Doctor in Virginia Colony

The first doctor in the Virginia colony was Larence Bohune, who arrived in 1610 and was killed in 1622 when the vessel "Margaret and John" was attacked by Spanish ships. There may have been doctors attached to previous expeditions but these cannot be considered to have practiced in this country. The first doctor in New England was Dr. Samuel Fuller, who arrived on December 21, 1620, on the Mayflower.

Some Things We Do Well
Throwing Out Kings

Italy expects a new heir to the throne in January. If it is a boy, and lives, and nothing happens to prevent, it will succeed in time its grandfather, the present King.

Arthur Brisbane

What rate Lloyds would charge to guarantee the succession is uncertain.

Mussolini's rise from extreme socialism, the trenches and the hospital maintained the House of Savoy in nominal power. "After Mussolini what?" is one of many European questions.

Mr. Hull, Secretary of State, sailed for South America six hours late, to help bring peace to the world, or at least help set a good example on these two continents. He left a pier "double-picketed"; the strike tied up his ship, which had to bring six non-striking seamen out to the secretary's boat, waiting patiently near the Statue of Liberty.

After peace is brought to the world, the next step will be to bring peace to United States industry. You may read some day: "The House, Senate and Supreme Court could not meet; the President has moved over to the New Willard; the Amalgamated Order of Furnace Tenders let all the fires go out, while, in sympathy, the Electric union turned off all lights and the elevator men said sympathetically, 'No elevators.'"

There must be, for public necessities, including shipping that carries passengers and mails, some better plan than the strike plan, and one that would be just to workers.

This country makes some things better than any other country—automobiles, and moving pictures, for instance—and Englishmen know it. The late Irving Thalberg, vice president of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, left 35,000 shares of Loew moving picture stock. As soon as the large block was offered for sale, Englishmen bought it all, by trans-Atlantic telephone, for about $2,200,000.

Nicholas Schenck, head of Loew's and its biggest stockholder, missed an opportunity, and knows it. Everybody across the ocean knows that this country is one NOT to be sold short, regardless of passing troubles.

It is said the royal tombs reserved for Spanish kings have been violated, some or all of the bodies thrown out. It would be a pity to offer insult to what remains of the truly great King, afraid of mice and spiders, but not of any man—Charles the Fifth—if he also was entombed in the Escurial Pantheon.

Of the others, many would be more useful as fertilizer on some Spanish field than they ever were on the Spanish throne, and it is not necessary to weep over them.

London, with the biggest floating fleet on earth, is striving to "humanize submarine warfare."

That is like trying to humanize rat poison. Look at Spain and you see what will happen in the next war; everybody will kill as many as he can, as brutally as possible; you remember the Lusitania?

The biggest crowd seen in Washington greeted the President on his triumphant return to Washington, the White House and his job. For eleven days he will see only executive assistants and rewind the big machine. Those willing to serve their country for a consideration, or tell the President, free of charge, how it could be run better, must wait, probably until his return from the trip to South America.

Voltaire's learned Dr. Pangloss was wrong; it is not true that "all is for the best in the best possible of worlds."

In spite of all our wealth and prosperity, more mothers die in childbirth, in this country, than in any other "civilized" country in the world.

You know that better conditions are needed in America when you see photographs of the wretched two-room log cabin in the swamp bottomlands where Mrs. James Bridges gave birth to quadruplets.

According to Science Service, if whisky is subjected for seven hours to "intense sound vibrations," which means "a loud noise," the seven noisy hours will age the whisky as much as "four years in the wood."

Think what noise can do to the delicate nervous system of the human being if in seven hours it can add four years to the age of raw whisky.

Muskmelon of Old World Origin, Authority Says

The muskmelon is believed to be of Old world origin and apparently was brought to the New world by Columbus, for it was reported that he grew the crop on the Island of Haiti upon the return of his second voyage to America, states a writer in the Rural New Yorker Years later in 1535 Cartier reported it as growing near the present city of Montreal. In 1609 melons were grown by the colonists in Virginia and they were reported to be grown by the Indians prior to 1748 near Philadelphia. One of the earliest and most comprehensive books on gardening was written by Bernard McMahon, a Philadelphia seedsman, in 1806. In his catalogue were listed 13 varieties of melons,, seeds of which he had for sale Such sorts as Early Romana, Black Portugal, Minorca, Netted Greenflesh and Nutmeg were included, all of which were Old world varieties and were described in European literature. One of the Netted Nutmeg or Citron varieties was brought into France from Africa by a monk in 1777; from thence it spread to many countries. From this type was developed in America a variety known as the Pineapple which was characterized by its small oval shape, thick nettedness and spicy flavor. This in all probability was the forerunner of Skillman's Netted introduced about 1835 and the Netted Gem of 1881.

Females First English Babes Born in America

The first child born of English parents in America was Virginia Dare, born at Roanoke, Va, in August 1587 about a month after the arrival of the expedition to found the colony Her grandfather was John White, governor of the colony, who returned to England for supplies in November of that year. It was not until August, 1591, that he was able to reach Virginia again, and no trace of the settlement then remained Other expeditions followed and in 1609 another white child, Virginia Laydon, was born in the colony.

The first male child born in the English colonies, according to a writer in the Detroit News, was probably Peregrine White, born on the Mayflower in the harbor of Cape Cod, November 20, 1620. He was the son of William and Susanna White. William White died during the first winter of the colony and Susanna married Governor Winslow, the first marriage in New England. The name Peregrine was considered appropriate, having the meaning of "pilgrim" or "traveler" This pioneer New Englander lived to 1704 and filled various civil and military offices.

Use of the Name "Guelph"

"Guelph" was the patronymic of the House of Hanover, whose members were British sovereigns from King George I to Queen Victoria. In 1701 the Electress Sophia of Hanover was proclaimed successor to the throne of Great Britain, being the granddaughter of King James I. She died on June 8, 1714, only a few weeks before her cousin, Queen Anne, last sovereign of the House of Stuart Sophia's son George therefore succeeded as King George I. On the death of Queen Victoria in 1901 the name of the dynasty changed to House of Saxe-Coburg and the family name to Wettin, because of the marriage of Queen Victoria to Prince Albert. In 1917 both the dynastic name and the patronymic were changed to Windsor.

When Leeches Were Popular

Most people regard leeches as pests, but 100 years ago thousands were raised and sold They were used by doctors to suck blood out of sick people So wide was the practice that the doctors themselves became known as "leeches." Leeches live mostly in water and especially in swimming holes. They can stretch like rubber They live only on blood, which they suck from animals and men much as a vacuum cleaner sucks up dust from a rug.

The Quantum Theory

The quantum theory is briefly defined by Webster as follows. "In the emission or absorption of energy by atoms or molecules, the process is not continuous but takes place by steps, each step being the emission or absorption of an amount of energy called the quantum," depending on frequency associated with the atom or molecule and on another factor called Planck's constant.

Pronouncing Word "Levee"

The word "levee" may be pronounced with the accent on the first syllable or on the second—lev-ee' or lev'ee. Formerly, says Literary Digest, through the influence of the French word levee, a morning reception, the accent was considered correctly placed on the second syllable; but American usage tends to distinguish between the two terms by giving a preference to the major stress on the first syllable when referring to the embankment.

Bird, Imitator of Sound

The Australian lyrebird is believed to be the best imitator of sound in the animal kingdom With incredible fidelity it can mimic, for example the bark of the dog, the crow of the cock, the cry of a child, the hum of a saw and the whistle of a locomotive.—Allen Fiske, Chicago, Ill., in Collier's Weekly.

Writing Ink Often Made From Oak Tree Gall Nut

Ordinary black writing ink is often made from the gall nuts of oak trees. These gall nuts are really the homes of little insects. For the purpose of making ink, says a writer in the Washington Star, they are taken from the trees, soaked in water, and later treated with a kind of iron which makes the extract of the galls turn jet black in color.

The peculiar acid found in the bark of oak trees, called tannic acid, is also used for ink. When iron is added to this acid it also turns black.

But neither the insect gall nor the bark ink is practical for fountain pens, where the ink must be thin to be useful. So for fountain pens, inks are made from coal tar. The ink on typewriter ribbons is also made from coal tar, mixed with glycerin so that it retains its moisture.

Red ink is a solution of one of three red dyes—magenta, carmine or eosin—in water or ammonia.

India ink is perhaps the most imperishable of inks. It is made by combining lamp black with a kind of gelatin. Water is added when it is used. India ink is similar to that wonderful ink used by the ancient Egyptians and Chinese on manuscripts still unfaded after centuries.

"Invisible" inks are made of substances which require heat, as chloride of cobalt does, to change their color Or sometimes they are made of lead, which must be exposed to a certain gas to become visible.

"Street of Lost Bread" Is Near Belfry in Ghent

The Belfry in Ghent is probably the most historical in this region, and its great bell is known as "The Heart of Ghent." The belfry is 375 feet in height and was erected in 1183 and played an important part in the city's history

In the early days the feudal lords allowed the burghers to ring the bells to summon the populace to discuss any injustice which they thought they were suffering. It was also a watch tower from which the approach of an enemy was noted.

It is this great bell which Browning immortalized in Roland's famous ride to Ghent. It dates from 1314, but was recast in 1659, and bears the inscription: "My name is Roland. When I toll, there is a fire; when I peal there is a victory."

The citizens of Ghent have thought much of the good things of life, for the streets nearby are named after articles of food—Fish street, Poultry street, Butter street and, rather tragically, the Street of the Lost Bread.

Jailing Debtors

The practice of tracking down and jailing debtors in England was inaugurated in 1282 when it became necessary to evolve some method of gaining security from foreigners and strangers. So parliament in that year passed the Statutes of the Merchants, which provided that in lending money the lender could bring the borrower before the Lord Mayor of London or the chief warden of any other town and make him acknowledge the debt and the date set for the payoff Failing payment, the creditor could then demand a warrant and commit the debtor to prison. This custom lasted for six centuries. The British money lenders later took to this practice so thoroughly that in 1825, a year of "commercial panic," there were issued 101,000 writs for the arrest of debtors. This caused so much indignation among relatives of the prisoners that ten years later they prevailed upon parliament to alleviate the laws, and in 1868, by further legislation, the custom was all but abolished.

Unique Wedding Ring Custom

A unique wedding ring custom, which reveals the matrimonial history of the wearer, exists among both the women and men of Norway. While the mate is alive, the ring is worn on the right hand and, when he or she dies, it is transferred to the left. Consequently in that country, one may see women and men with one, two, and even three "past" rings on the left hand and a "present" one on the right.—Collier's Weekly.

The Near East

The Near East is a purely popular term and is generally applied rather loosely to a large geographical region in southwestern Europe, southwestern Asia and northeastern Africa As generally understood the Near East comprises Turkey in Europe, Asia Minor, Armenia, Georgia, Azerbaijan, the South Russian republics, Persia, Syria, Palestine, Mesopotamia, some of the islands in the Mediterranean, and perhaps Arabia and Egypt.

Ancient Feudal Manor

One of England's most ancient feudal manors, the "God Begot" hostel at Winchester, dating back to the Tenth century, became a sanctuary for criminals and fugitivves and held its own courts of justice until the reign of Henry VIII, when it passed to the dean of Winchester cathedral. The main structure of the manor, built in 1558, remains virtually untouched.

Andrew Jackson, as President, vetoed every bill for public improvements that congress laid before him until convinced that the proposed measure would be of improvement to the whole country and not to a portion of it alone

SOYBEANS AND FAIRY TALES

Major soybean products are oil and oilmeal and upon these rests the immediate future of the U S. crop, E F Johnson of St. Louis declared addressing the Chicago Agricultural Club recently. He warned against current excessive enthusiasm that is causing new processing plants to be built when there is already a capacity for processing twice the total crop ever grown here.

"That little miracle plant," he said, "has amazing possibilities. It bids fair to take up the extra acres some thing we should not plant to corn or wheat. Its meal provides a wonderful livestock feed Large quantities of its oil passes into the edible trade. In the paint industry the soybean is making splendid progress, and good headway in numerous other fields Soy flour is growing in popularity Glue offers an outlet.

"And for all these things we are justly proud But to expect the little wonder bean to become a panacea for all our farm and factory ills is like asking a small boy to whip Pop-Eye the Silor"

Machinery makers, it was stated, have exaggerated the profits of processing beans, with the result of over-expansion of equipment. Tall tales of future motor cars being constructed largely of soybeans were ridiculed So were other very glowing stories of fictional turn.

"What the soybean can do needs no such exggeration," said Johnson, internationally known expert who recently studied soybeans in eight European countries. "It has aided farm prosperity Its oilmeal has proved equal to tankage for hogs when fed with minerals It can replace most meat scraps in poultry rations Feeders use it in place of linseed oilmeal when price is favorable Feeders and mixers regard it superior to cottonseed oil meal

"The future is bright for growers. They will make money Acreage will increase Processors will continue finding larger outlets for the oil and meal But discount all the fairy tales"

NEEDY GET FISH

During the two years ending on June 30, 1936, a total of 2660,223 pounds of coarse fish was distributed to various welfare organizations in the state The fish were part of those seined from lakes and streams by the State Conservation Commission in its program of controlling undesirable species and the improvement of fishing conditions

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted
by William Bruckart

National Press Building Washington, D. C.

Washington — Probably sufficient time has elapsed since the election to give us something of a perspective, something of an understanding of what happened November 3. In that record-breaking vote for the re-election of Mr. Roosevelt, there lie covered perhaps the greatest number of reasons why votes were cast as they were, ever to influence a national election. The results left the Republicans stunned; they were surprising even to the Democrats and that is no secret.

What Happened?

I have consulted with numerous among the better informed political students and political writers concerning the basis for this deluge of votes that came so nearly making the electoral college unanimous for Mr. Roosevelt that there had been only one time in history when the opposition received fewer votes in the electoral college than Governor Landon will receive. The inquiries have brought almost as many different answers as there were people interviewed. Each one of these persons was thoroughly convinced that his diagnosis was correct and yet after hearing all of them I have a conviction that each one was only partially right. It was, in my opinion, a combination of reasons that brought about such an enormous vote for election of Mr. Roosevelt. The various reasons entering into that combination were influential individually only as regards a comparatively small percentage of the population.

How else can it be explained? Unless separate reasons operated in various sections of the country and, indeed, upon segments of voters in those various sections, no such thing could have happened as the election, for example, of Henry Cabot Lodge, a Republican, to the senate in Massachusetts, while Mr Roosevelt carried the state overwhelmingly for himself as a Democrat There were other instances where Republicans won in statewide elections while the state's electoral vote went to the President.

This necessarily shows that even in states that normally vote a straight ticket, either Democratic or Republican, there was some appeal which Mr. Roosevelt had for the voters that was non-existent insofar as the lesser candidates were concerned. In other words, there were split tickets and if this ever proved anything, it surely proved this year that the nation was overwhelmingly in favor of Mr. Roosevelt personally.

I think that, as always, the national ticket carried many men into the house and senate, only it is quite apparent that the percentage of representatives and senators elected this time on the strength of the national ticket was larger than usual. I mean that instead of local personalities carrying the national ticket, the national ticket swept in the local personalities because it is the tendency of a vast majority of voters to vote a straight ticket.

What I have just said seems really to complicate the whole picture. It seems to complicate it for the reason that such a paradox as the election of Mr. Lodge in Massachusetts occurred within this deluge of votes.

But whatever else can be said, nothing can overshadow the consequences of the vast power handed to Mr. Roosevelt. He is in complete control and has a right to feel that anything he does will be accepted by a large majority of the population. With the exception of George Washington, who was elected President by the unanimous vote of the electoral college, and James Monroe, who had all excepting one electoral vote with him, no President of the United States has ever been awarded such a verdict.

So, it strikes me that the outstanding question before the United States today is "how will Mr. Roosevelt use this authority?" It is in his hands to become a man of history, a man who will stand out among all of our Presidents if he uses his power wisely. It is to be suggested in the same breath that if he misuses or abuses that power he can easily become just as infamous

I said above that there were so many reasons influential in bringing about the unusual vote for Mr Roosevelt that it was almost impossible to enumerate them. Nevertheless, I shall try to set down some of the more important ones that appear to have been operative It must be remembered that these larger reasons embrace numerous and sundry variations. Each of the important reasons is made up of a number of less important and less significant and even less influential reasons. Each of the larger and each of the smaller propositions had its effect.

Some Reasons

I do not want to have it appear that the order in which I name these various reasons has any significance. In fact, I think it would be utterly foolish for anyone to attempt to say that one particular reason was more influential than another. How, for instance, can any one individual know what caused particular voters to vote a particular way without knowing the individual voters concerned? So, I am simply outlining some of the reasons that the political students agree have been important:

That the federal government can or should interfere in the management of basic industries like agriculture, manufacturing, power and possibly in the commercial field of finance.

That the government can or should be centralized to a greater extent in the federal machinery as distinguished from the state machinery. This implies a disappearance to a large extent of the age-old contention for state's rights. It goes even beyond that and into the field of local government which, it must be said, has not been too efficient.

That the people, as citizens of the United States, ought not be hamstrung by rigid constitutional provisions and strict interpretation of them by the United States Supreme court. This may easily be expanded into other propositions such as modification of revision of court powers; mandatory retirement of judges when they reach a given age, or constitutional amendments giving the federal government more direct contact with individual citizens and individual businesses.

That the great business leaders of the last score of years are outmoded and that the time has come for a fresh start in business leadership just as the advent of the New Deal accomplished a fresh start in the political leadership. In this thought is hidden various and sundry possibilities. There are those, for example, who have become permeated with a hatred of big business. Likewise, there are those who feel that only portions of big business have been unfair and have crushed the little fellow. Aside from these two is a third group that surely feels the necessity for strict federal control of all types of business, good as well as bad, in order to prevent private initiative from getting out of bounds.

Leaders Outmoded

That many of our citizens are willing for the federal government to participate in business by direct competition with private initiative. This thought, expanded, naturally takes on the aspect of a broader movement for public ownership of various businesses than has been evident heretofore.

It is axiomatic that reasons effective with one person are not effective with another and reasons that operate to control the views of a county or a section of a state or even a region of states undoubtedly have had nothing at all to do with votes taken in other parts of our nation.

There are unsettled conditions. There are ten or eleven million people who are out of jobs. Some of these felt that they had been benefited by one Roosevelt policy; some felt they had been benefited by another. However one may examine the picture, it seems to me inescapable that it was a combination of reasons and not any single proposition. It may be added, as some honestly feel, that the Roosevelt political machine was able to encompass all of these factors and to show in the various sections of the country how effective particular policies had been in those particular sections. That to my mind is going beyond the scope of intelligence because strong as the Roosevelt political machine is, it had to have and had to hold the faith of an extraordinarily large number of voters in addition to those controlled by the machine in order to roll up a majority of nine million votes.

So, again we get back to the question: what will Mr. Roosevelt do with this new mandate, this fresh delegation of power that has been given to him?

What Will He Do?

Already there are signs developing among the old line, conservative Democrats of a desire to persuade him to be less radical than he was in his first four years as President These Democrats feel that this country needs a little less of reform and considerably more of sound governmental management How much effect they will have on general administration policies obviously is problematical. It is problematical because included among the new senators and representatives, especially among the representatives, are many men who do not impress me as having the slightest understanding of governmental functions Consequently, from these and from those wild eyes already in the house membership, we undoubtedly will see some of the worst harum scarum pieces of legislation ever proposed in the national house of representatives.

It is such circumstances as are presented in the type of legislation that I named that will test Mr Roosevelt's real capacity as a statesman.

My Favorite Recipe

By Ginger Rogers

Fudge Brownies

4 eggs
2 cups sugar
1 cup butter
4 squares chocolate
2 cups flour
1 cup chopped nuts
2 teaspoons vanilla

Beat the eggs and add the sugar. Melt the butter and chocolate together. Combine the mixtures, beating them thoroughly Add the flour, nuts and flavoring. Bake in a shallow pan for about twenty minutes in a moderate oven. Cut in squares or novel bridge-card shapes before removing from the pan.

It is important not to bake brownies too long. Their delightful quality depends on their being a bit "crusty" on the outside and moist in the center. Any kind of nuts may be used, although English walnuts are usually preferred.

Hello Everybody!

"Three Terrible Hours"

By FLOYD GIBBONS,
Famous Headline Hunter

THE sea, boys and girls, has produced some pretty tough customers. What I mean, Pop-eye the Sailor isn't entirely a figment of a cartoonist's imagination. He's more than half truth. The lads who spend their whole lives fighting the elements in the places where those elements are at their worst, develop the sort of constitution that a dray horse would envy. Some of their feats of endurance are almost unbelievable.

Well sir, we've got a sailor with us today, in the person of Distinguished Adventurer Janis Libert of Brooklyn, N. Y., but I'm going to let you judge for yourself whether or not Jan is one of the lads who can take it when the sea starts dishing it out. And just to give you something to judge by, I'm going to tell you the story of an adventure he had on St. Patrick's day, March 17, 1920.

Jan was signed on as an able seaman on the S. S. Tewkesbury, out of the Peruvian port of Antofogasta with a cargo of nitrate, bound for Hamburg, Germany. They had passed through the Panama canal, coaled ship at St. Louisburg, and then beat their way through high seas and heavy snowstorms until they were nearing the Newfoundland coast. There the first trouble began.

She Struck a Submerged Ledge.

A few miles off Newfoundland the ship was caught in a heavy undersea current that began dragging them toward the barren cliffs that marked the coast. The Tewkesbury was doing 11 knots an hour, in an effort to beat out to sea again, but the current was dragging it inshore at the rate of 30 knots an hour, and it was only a matter of arithmetic to figure out how long she'd stay afloat

Jan says it was five bells St. Patrick's day morning—2 30 a. m. to us landlubbers—when the Tewkesbury struck a submerged ledge about a ship's length away from the 250-foot cliff that rose in front of them. As they struck, the VESSEL'S BOTTOM WAS RIPPED OUT. The stern broke off and slid from the ledge into 30 fathoms of water.

Immediately, the crew tried to launch life-boats, but one by one they were dashed to pieces against the side of the ship by the heavy sea that was running. There were two lifeboats left—barely enough to carry off the crew of 28 and the 3 passengers—when Captain Privox, the skipper, ordered two men to get into the next boat and fend it off from the sides while it was being lowered. One of the men was Jan Libert.

Jan Was Left to Do the Job Alone.

It was a hard job—and a dangerous one. It's no cinch to fend off a heavy lifeboat in a sea strong enough to dash a steamer against the rocks. But how dangerous, Jan had no idea in the beginning. He got a hint of it, though, when his partner caught his hand in a pulley and smashed it while trying to pull in a piece of slack rope. That left Jan to fend the boat off alone—a perilous, two-man job, in the hands of one.

It Was a Hard Job—and a Dangerous One.

IT WAS A BATTLE FOR LIFE. Not only Jan's life, but the lives of a dozen others as well. If that boat smashed up, there would be only one left, and that barely half big enough to hold the passengers and crew The seas were so high that Jan had all he could do to keep the boat from smashing—so violent that the skipper couldn't send another man down to help him. The Newfoundland waters were cold as ice, and the Newfoundland winds were colder still. As Jan labored to keep the boat away from the side, the salt spray collected on his hands—soaked his clothing—and froze there!

The lifeboat was pitching and tossing like a chip in a hurricane. It was impossible to load the crew into it while the lashing storm kept up its furious assault. And so, FOR THREE HOURS Jan fought a battle against cold, ice and the Atlantic—three terrible hours during which time the only chance to rescue all the crew lay in Jan's freezing hands.

Snow was falling by the time the wind had calmed and the loading of the boats started. Then minutes after fresher, less weary men took over the task of fending off the boat, Jan's hands were frozen and useless. Still he wasn't much better off than when he'd been fighting the elements alone. Tremendous seas rapidly filled both boats and, due to the cliffs that stretched along the shore, the only place either of them could land was at Peters river, 15 miles away. Frozen though he was, Jan knew it would be a long time before he got a chance to thaw out again.

Too Cold to Heed the Warning.

While some of the crew rowed and the others bailed for their lives, the two boats started out on a heartbreaking journey. For FOUR MORE HOURS they kept up the struggle. "And believe me," says Jan, "if I thought I was cold before, I now knew what cold really was like As we pointed our boat toward the beach, a fisherman hailed us and warned us not to try to land there. But we were all so cold and weak that we knew it was our only chance."

Desperate, the freezing mariners headed their boats into the breakers, not knowing what new danger to expect. They found out soon enough. As the combers threw the boats into shallow water, they hit sunken rocks and capsized, hurling their occupants in all directions. A wave hit Jan and hurled him under water—whirled him round and round. He was too weak to fight it. He thought he was finished then.

He was about to give up when he felt gravel under his feet. He stood up—sank to his knees in soft sand, and remained there, rooted to the spot, exposed to the full force of the giant combers that rolled over him one after another. The world began to go black in front of his eyes, and the next thing Jan remembered was someone's hand clutching at his neck—dragging him to shore.

For the next few weeks, Jan saw everything through a gray haze. At first he thought he was going blind from exposure After a while, though, the fog vanished from before his eyes, and he could see as well as ever You have the whole story now—and you can judge for yourselves if Jan can take it when Old Man Sea dishes it out.

First Settlement

Cochin, Southern India, situated on the Arabian sea, was the site of one of the first European settlements on the Indian peninsula. Cabral dropped anchor in the harbor in 1500 after his attack on Calicut, 100 miles up the coast. Two years later Vasco da Gama visited the port. The next year Albuquerque arrived and built the first European fort in the East.

Memorial to Pocahontas

Pocahontas was buried in the chancel of St. George's church, Gravesend, England, where there is a memorial tablet and two stained glass windows set up by the Virginia chapter of the Colonial Dames of America. She died in 1617, at the age of twenty-two, when she was on the point of returning to Virginia with her husband, John Rolfe.

CULLING LEADS TO PROFIT FROM EGGS

Reducing Size of Flock to Fit House Important.

By H H Alp, Extension Poultryman, University of Illinois.—WNU Service

With feed prices soaring, farmers who are counting on eggs as a source of cash revenue will need to watch closely those practices which tend to lower production costs.

Feed is usually considered to be 60 per cent of the total cost of producing eggs. However, it will be folly for most flock owners to attempt to concoct cheap rations by using unsatisfactory substitutes for some of the standard grain ingredients.

It will pay in most cases to stick with the regular proved rations and to look elsewhere for ways of lowering the cost of production.

Culling the flock to eliminate all birds except those in top physical condition is one method of lowering production costs Culling not only helps to eliminate wasteful feeding, but also tends to lessen chances of future mortality

Reducing the size of the flock to fit the house so that each bird has four square feet of floor space is also important. Special attention to an adequate supply of water, especially during cold weather, will also go a long way toward lowering production costs

Cleanliness of the water is as vital as the abundant supply Keeping the water clean, not by pills but by clean dishes and stands, is one of the chief methods of obtaining efficient egg production Furthermore, the value of good care and cleanliness around the poultry house can not be overestimated.

Concrete Floor Is Best for the Poultry House

Concrete makes the most satisfactory type of poultry house floor, advises the Missouri experiment station. It is easily cleaned, ratproof, and provides a dry, durable floor. Where the sand and gravel are obtainable, a thin section concrete floor can be installed for two cents per square foot.

The success of such a floor is dependent upon having a dirt or rock fill eight to ten inches above the ground level. This fill must be tamped well to prevent it from settling. If a dirt fill is used, it is desirable to place a layer of cheap tar paper on top of the fill to prevent any capillary water seeping through the concrete

The use of good quality concrete is important in making the floor. In order to have a water-tight floor, it is necessary to limit the water to five or five and one-half gallons to each sack of cement Creek gravel can be used if there is enough sand in the mixture to make the concrete smooth A mixture of one part of cement to four and one-half or five parts of gravel, or a mixture of one part of cement, two parts of sand and three parts of gravel can be used After the concrete has been poured, it should be smoothed as much as possible in order to facilitate cleaning.

Color of Combs

The combs of a vigorous flock of chickens will be bright red, the chickens will be active and constantly searching for feed. When chickens have ruffled plumage, a dumpy appearance, a lagging step and a dark red or pale comb, trouble has crossed the horizon line. Many poultrymen consider an off-color of the comb and wattles the best index to a sick fowl, for the comb is made up of a network of blood vessels.

Poultry Hints

Poultry ailments are prevented much easier than cured.

One-half the annual production of eggs is produced during the four months of March, April, May and June.

The chief cause of leg weakness in young birds is said to be overfeeding.

In color the Rhode Island Red is a rich, dark red, approaching a mahogany.

One hundred hens not laying will eat approximately 19 pounds of feed a day, 100 hens laying 50 per cent will eat around 24 pounds and 100 hens laying 70 per cent will eat about 26 pounds a day.

Size of the egg depends on hen's breeding; size runs in the blood.

The Hebrews and ancient Irish used the hen's eggs as their unit of measure of capacity.

Chicken incubators of Soviet Russia are expected to produce 18,600,000 chicks this year.

Segregate the sick birds and use a mild disinfectant in the drinking water to prevent spread of disease.

On Congeniality—

Companionship Plus Adjustments Is Far Better Than Loneliness

IN EVERY family, whether little or large, and however small or spacious the dwelling may be, there are times when conflicts arise because of unwanted contacts. Some special place may be desired above all others by one, or possibly two, in conference and a second or a third person coming in and wanting that particular room also is a cause of dissension. There may be no lack of affection between the people, but a temporary ruffling of personalities which is disturbing. When living quarters are congested, these occasions arise frequently, but they are not limited to such conditions. There are these convergencies, with their annoying discords, regardless of space, or the lack of it, and numbers of persons, or the fewness of them. It would appear to be partly a similarity of tastes as well as the popularity of the spot, whatever it is, that was an element of the magnetic force drawing the people together.

Transient Dissension.

It is true that instances are rare in which such trouble is more than a passing dissension. But this is enough to set the persons in bad humors for a few moments anyway, unless one or more of them has enough ununderstanding of the situation to smooth others, or has a keen sense of humor, which sense is like oil to machinery in keeping things running without friction.

Congeniality.

It should be remembered that congenality is one cause for this convergence of persons. The same things are liked, the same impulses are present, and enjoyment and discord are both caused by much the same things. Each of these persons is drawn to the same things and to the same places, and so naturally meet in the same room in the home, or the identical spot. If there is the desire to be alone, resentment is stirred by the presence of another. It is at such times that tact and kindliness are needed. I am assuming that love is not lacking. Without this essential element in home life, there will be discord anywhere and at any time, if not, indeed, at all times.

Loneliness.

When harmony is desired, and clashes of temperaments of those caused by such things as are under discussion today, exist, it is well to bring oneself up with a round turn by thinking of the loneliness that would be felt if we did not have our family about us. During absences from home, or when one is left there when others are away, the realization of what it means to be alone and also together, creeps into the mind and it is warmed by the very thought of companionship of dear ones.

100,000 Miles of Fence

The longest barricade on record was the 100,000 miles of fence built in Australia about 20 years ago to protect it from a plague of rabbits, tens of millions of which overran the country and at times devastated vast areas of fertile land, not only eating all crops, grasses, roots and bushes, but even the bark of the trees.—Collier's Weekly.

Outstanding Qualities

IT IS strange and mournful truth, that the qualities which enable men to shine are exactly those which minister to the worst ruin. God's highest gifts—talent, beauty, feeling, imagination, power; they carry with them the possibility of the highest heaven and the lowest hell. The shallow fishing-boat glides safely over the reefs where the noble barque stands; it is the very might and majesty of her career that bury the sharp rock deeper in her bosom.—F. W. Robertson.

Talent is long patience.

Full Moons

The period of one full moon to another full moon is 29 days 12 hours 44 minutes and 2 87 seconds, or 29.53059 days. When one full moon occurs on the first or second day of the month, there will be another full moon before that month ends. In September of this year there were two full moons, one on the 1st and the other on the 30th.

In 1866, the months of January and March had two full moons each. This remarkable sequence, astronomers estimate, will not occur again for some 2,500,000 years. —Cleveland Plain Dealer

OF COURSE, children should never drink coffee. And many grown-ups, too, find that the caffein in coffee disagrees with them. If you have headaches or indigestion or can't sleep soundly... try Postum. It contains no caffein. It is simply whole wheat and bran, roasted and slightly sweetened.

You may miss coffee at first, but after 30 days you'll love Postum for its own rich, satisfying flavor. ## TRAGEDY OF DEATH

It is tragic scenes such as this with its terrible implement of lack of highway [illegible] which makes us shudder at Death's in- creasing harvest of lives

This [illegible] of [illegible] olded steel illustrates better than words the aftermath of a terrific crash of a truck careening head on into a family motor car The truck ripped open the motor car from front to rear (Note the flattened bumper on the truck, also the out- worn tread on the tire)

According to the National Safety Council the traffic death toll of the nation reached a new high mark in the first nine months of this year with 25 850 lives lost, with a council prediction that the year's [illegible] fatalities will reach a record high of 37 500

In highway casualties, truck ac- cidents far exceed those caused by motor cars It is revealed that the usurpation of highways by trucks has resulted not only in flagrant monopoly of public roads to trans- act business on wheels but that most of the truckers involved are irresponsible and do not have public liability insurance to cover personal injury and damage to property of others.

National Topics Interpreted
By WILLIAM BRUCKART
NATIONAL PRESS BLDG. WASHINGTON, D. C.

Washington.—There is an "era of good feeling" going the rounds that is quite different than anything we have had since early in 1929. It is being promoted with a great deal of enthusiasm and present results as well as indications justify the promotion work that is going on in the New Deal press agent circles.

Era of Good Feeling

This era of good feeling is quite an interesting thing from another angle, namely, politics. It is being used by the politicians again to establish President Roosevelt in the same situation as he found himself at the beginning of his first term in the White House. I am afraid he is being built up again as a superman and, in politics, a superman or his position is hard to maintain in the public mind.

Business also is indulging in this era of good feeling. Business always puts its best foot forward, just as lovers do. It wants to develop a spirit of good will on the part of the public and it wants to show its financial backers how things are coming along all hunky-dory. There is nothing wrong in the attitude. It is perfectly logical and human—and it is very interesting to see this wave of healthy feeling grow.

The important, as well as the interesting, thing about this era of good feeling is that to the expert students it shows a gradual, if not conclusive, decline in depression conditions. It proves that things are on the up grade—not that they are at the top yet, but that a momentum is being established which may carry the economic recovery to the top if the federal government settles down and treats business with fairness.

As I said above, New Deal press agents are promoting this business recovery for all that it is worth. Naturally, they are attributing it to the re-election of Mr. Roosevelt as the basic factor in this upward surge of business. They are capitalizing it to the fullest because by so capitalizing it, the political party in power gets its due share of credit. There is no doubt that they will continue on this course because everyone likes to read or hear about improved business conditions, restoration of dividend payments, increasing volume of traffic, any and all things that show the nation is slowly but surely getting back on its economic feet.

While the New Dealers are shouting from the housetops how President Roosevelt has accomplished all of these things, there comes a discordant note from business itself. Business leaders, just like politicians, want credit for whatever is accomplished, whether they are responsible or someone else. They do not care any more than politicians whether the credit properly is theirs. It is simply an exposition of the vain, glorious trait that seems to exist in nearly everyone.

Business is seeking to show that it is pulling itself together, opening new factories, raising wages, in spite of New Deal policies with the handicaps that some of those policies include. So, business is seeking to counterbalance the politicians and the politicians, speaking through New Deal press statements, are trying to fortify their own position as saviors of the country. Neither one is correct. Without doing too much debunking, I believe it ought to be said that President Roosevelt and his associates have executed some government policies that have been helpful to the business structure. With equal frankness, it ought to be said that business leaders have taken the bull by the horns and have proceeded to help materially in putting commerce and industry back on the right track again. Neither one ought to take too much credit. Some credit is due each but neither one nor both together is entitled to claim all of the credit for the recovery of business that is now underway.

Whose the Credit

The answer to the upward swing of business lies chiefly in the fact that the depression has worn itself out. It would have worn itself out just the same whether the administration was New Deal or Republican. It would have accomplished just as much in the way of expanded buying power and increased production whether Mr. Roosevelt was re-elected or whether he had been defeated and Governor Landon of Kansas had been elected at the end of the recent national campaign.

I am reminded by this discussion of a remark that the late Eugene Black made while he was governor of the Federal Reserve board. On that occasion I asked him whether there were signs of the end of the depression. His reply was, "not yet." He added, however, that the depression would destroy itself as every other depression in history had done and that when this point of exhaustion had been reached, commerce and industry would take an upward swing. Then, he added with reference to some of the economic students of the administration in power: "It will wear itself out and good times will come back again—and every doggone professor and economic theorist in the world will try to claim credit for it."

So, I think it can be said without equivocation that if anybody or anything is entitled to credit for the indicated recovery movement, we had better be fair and admit it was a combination of circumstances, not the least of which was the natural law of supply and demand. It seems utterly silly to me for any individuals or groups of individuals to attempt to corral all of the praise.

Those who have access to the market pages of the great metropolitan daily newspapers must have been impressed by the rapid fire announcements coming from big industrial corporations of wage increases, bonuses for employees and melon cutting in the form of dividends for the shareholders. They must have been impressed, likewise, with the sharp rise in security prices that obviously has reflected the expanded business and increased earnings.

Wage Increases

A prosperous nation may not always be a happy one but there is a certain psychology about a prosperous nation that makes it carefree. It is a psychology that makes the average man and woman forget to a large extent about the recent pinch of economic displacements and, as well, those same people are inclined to disregard and give no consideration to the morrow.

Let us look into those circumstances. When corporations or other forms of business have reasonable years in their particular lines, early in the winter they begin to see what the year's total will be. They can figure rather accurately what the returns will be in the last two months, say, after they have made their totals for the first ten months of the year. So, whenever they reach that stage in a reasonably successful year they can make their plans for distribution of the profits.

Now, we have a tremendously high tax rate on corporation surpluses and we have rather high tax rates on incomes of individuals. Corporations and other businesses, therefore, start figuring how to do the best they can with the earnings of the year. Some of them determine that their employees should share substantially in the profits of their labors; others want to distribute as much of these earnings as they may to their stockholders because such a showing creates a demand in the market for their shares and such a demand is influential in establishment of the corporation's credit for borrowing money if it needs to borrow from the banks. In either event, corporation managements obviously give considerations to the tax the corporation would have to pay and I think it is not a matter of condemnation for them to turn over as much of their profit as they can to those interested in the business instead of to a government which wastes so much.

To be perfectly fair, it must be said that the money now being distributed either in dividends or in bonuses to workers or in wage increases was earned before the recent election. Its distribution, however, is motivated largely on prospects for the future. In other words, those responsible for these distributions of earnings feel that they can let that money out of their hands. They may not be distributing all of the sums available but the "era of good feeling" is accepted by all of them as indicating the chances for continued earnings are bright.

I have merely touched on the effect of distribution of earnings among the holders of capital. It is just as important to consider the effect of distribution of these earnings on the laboring classes. Labor has been convinced under the American system for many years that it is entitled to some share of the profits from its products. Employers are taking that same view to a greater extent than anywhere else in the world. When labor gets bonuses or gets increases in its pay, there is a reaction among those workers who have sound judgment that prompts them to do the best they can on their jobs. That is to say, they become contented workers and they are less susceptible to the propaganda of radicals who seek to promote strikes and labor disturbances to further the ends of communism. That is a part of the era of good feeling as much as the added earnings of corporations or the enthusiasm of politicians over victory.

FLOYD GIBBONS ADVENTURERS' CLUB

Hello Everybody

"The Needle That Slipped"

By FLOYD GIBBONS,

OU never can tell an adventurer by what he looks like on the surface. Take Herb Berman of Brooklyn, N. Y., for in- nce. Herb went to Rutgers university and learned to be a rmacist and a chemist. Today he's a traveling representative a firm that manufactures tooth powder. Not very adventur- , you might say—but all that happened after he'd kissed Old dy Adventure goodbye and told her to look around for an- r boy friend.

Maybe you wouldn't think it of Herb to look at him now, but the h is that he's got a past. He ran away from home at the age of six- and went to work in a munitions plant that was turning out ex- ives for the Allied armies. And in 1918, when he was eighteen s old, he was fighting in Palestine, Egypt and Turkey with the Brit- forces.

Today he's going to tell us a strange tale of an experience that happened to him on his trip overseas—the story of how a needle slipped, and how doggone lucky it was for Herb that it did.

Discomfort and Death Aboard.

Herb enlisted in the Canadian army, and they shipped him off in captured German steamer, the Hundsen, with a convoy of 11 other . That trip was no pleasure jaunt. The quarters in the main hold were damp and crowded. There was the continual fear of being pedoed by U-boats. To make matters worse, the ship ran into a m off Newfoundland and almost sank. The hatches were battened n for three days.

Below decks, the quarters were a shamble, with close to a thousand ick landlubbers making matters no better. And to make them even se, the dreaded Spanish influenza broke out, and, coupled with the sea of the seasickness, some of those poor devils were in a terrible ht.

Before long, the Grim Reaper himself began to stalk among the coughing, moaning, fever stricken men. Flu victims were dying at the rate of eight or nine a day. Herb says the havoc of those three storm tossed, fever ridden days will never be erased from his memory. But there's one other experience that he'd remember even longer than that if it were humanly possible. That's the episode of the slipping needle.

Took a Nap Among the Bodies.

It was the last night of the storm, and Herb had been picked for an leasant detail—the irksome duty of standing watch over a dozen or corpses of men who had died during the day He slid down a ladder,

"God Have Mercy! He's Come to Life!"

ad tired and still weak from sea-sickness, into a cold, damp, tiny om, bare except for the bodies, wrapped in blankets and rolled up in e pieces of duck canvas that were to be their shrouds. He sat wn on a box in the corner, but the moment he did, he began to doze .

For a while he tried to fight off the sleepiness that was all but over- wering him. Twice he woke up to find he had slipped off the box and as lying on the floor next to his dead buddies. Finally he gave up ying to stay awake. No one would be down for a couple hours, nless it was the sail-maker come to sew up the bodies. His body cold d clammy, and his head spinning, Herb reached for a blanket and rapped it around himself.

The blanket gave little warmth. Herb pulled a canvas sheet from pile in the corner and wrapped that around him too. Then he stretched t on the cold floor, and in another moment he was fast asleep.

"How long I slept," says Herb, "I couldn't tell you. But suddenly I awoke with a start as I felt a sharp, piercing pain in my right thigh. I tried to sit up, and suddenly I felt as if I had been put in a straight-jacket. My back wouldn't bend, and I could hardly move a muscle.

Cut Himself Out of the Shroud.

"It was pitch dark. I tried to jerk an arm loose and rub my eyes. hen suddenly, from right beside me I heard a piercing scream—heard horror-stricken voice cry: 'God have mercy! He's come to life!'"

"Before I could utter a word, I heard a man's retreating footsteps ounding up the stairs. By that time I was thoroughly aroused from y sleep. I worked an arm loose, reached for my trench knife, and egan cutting at whatever it was that bound me. The knife ripped rough canvas from my knees to my waist. I managed to untangle yself and sit up."

By that time there was a clatter of feet and a babble of voices at the top of the stairs. A group of men headed by the sergeant of the guard, consternation written on their faces, descended slowly into the hold. By that time, too, the cause of all the screaming and hullabaloo had dawned on Herb.

Saved by a Jab With the Needle.

The man who had done the screaming must have been the sail- aker. He had probably come down while Herb slept, to sew up the ead soldiers in their shrouds. Herb, being wrapped up in canvas, ust have looked pretty much like the corpses, and the sail-maker had one right on sewing him up until a careless jab with the needle wakened Herb and interrupted the operations.

For the rest of that trip, Herb had to take a lot of kidding. The boys ointed him out as "the would-be stiff" and never gave him a chance o forget he was the guy who tried to desert by going over the side in dead man's haberdashery. But underneath all the joking, Herb can e a serious side to that gruesome episode. "After many years," he ys, "I still dread to contemplate what would have happened if the sail- aker had been more deft with the needle and I had first suffocated and en been consigned to the sharks. Just one more among the thou- ands of missing—men who went away and never came back."

Size of Some Skulls

The average man has about 1,450 ubic centimeters of brains and oman's capacity is 1,250 to 1,300. Daniel Webster's skull measured lose to 2,000; Bismark's, 1,965; the oet La Fontaine's, 1,950; Beetho- en's 1,750, and Kant, the philoso- her, 1,740. With one exception, ese were the biggest heads ever easured and all fell short of the kull of an Aleut, who is thought to ave lived several hundred years go. The exception was the skull of Russian writer Turgeniev, which d a capacity of 2,030 cubic centi- eters, for No. 1 ranking.

Use of Sugar Cane

Sugar cane, a coarse grass, is be- lieved to be a native of Asia or the East Indies. It was unknown in Eu- rope until the Middle Ages, when the Arabs introduced it into Sicily and Spain. Sugar cane was taken to Brazil about 1500, to Mexico a few years later, and is now cultivated in most warm countries. Two kinds of syrup are made from sugar cane The first is the golden syrup left over from the manufacture of sugar. The second, such as a Mississippi plant will make, is merely the juice of the sugar cane boiled down, and is known as molasses.

Chemical of Sight Made to Rebuild Itself in Tube

Visual Purple Now Is Regenerated

VISUAL purple, a chemical compound in the eye, and necessary for seeing, has been made to rebuild itself in a test tube under controlled experimental conditions, in the laboratory of Prof. Selig Hecht of Columbia university.

This is the first time that the process has taken place under fully controlled conditions, which make its repetition possible. It is the first time since 1878 that visual purple has been regenerated at all, although many physiologists have tried without success to repeat the experiment of Dr. W. Kuhne of Heidelberg university, who in that year reported having accomplished this very exciting biochemical feat.

Professor Hecht's associates in his present research are Drs. Aurin M. Chase, Simon Shlaer and Charles Haig.

Found in the Retina.

Visual purple is a pinkish-purple pigment or dyestuff of involved chemical composition, found in the rod-cells of the retina, or light-sensitive layer of the eye. Both in the living eye, and when chemically extracted into a glass vessel, it loses its color when illuminated, first turning yellow and then completely colorless.

In the glass vessel, it has never been turned back to its original color again, except in the 1878 experiment of Dr. Kuhne. But in the living eye the reaction is reversible, that is, if the light is shut off the visual purple forms itself anew from the colorless product of its photochemical breakdown.

Physiologists regard the success of Professor Hecht and his associates in reversing the bleaching of visual purple at will as a very substantial forward step toward the ultimate understanding of the process of seeing, because it is now possible to perform controlled experiments in one very vital part of that process, where experiments have been impossible until now.

Visual purple for the present research was obtained from the eyes of frogs. The animals were kept in the dark for several hours; then they were killed quickly, and the pigment removed from their eyes by chemical extraction processes.

More Color Promised for Moving Pictures

ROCHESTER, N. Y.—Color, brilliantly true to life, promises to be the next widespread change in the cinema world. And in laboratories scientists are working on the difficult problem of giving depth or perspective to the movie screen.

Color is used in some extent in commercial productions, but the engineers look forward to the day when theatrical talkies will use color film almost entirely. Engineers point to the recent development of amateur color film that in about a year has made black-and-white movies almost obsolete. The difficulty in applying the same process to the theaters is that it has not yet become possible to make prints by the color process most widely used for home movies.

Usefulness of color films is not limited to entertainment or amateur use. The making of permanent color movie records of difficult medical operations will be of use in teaching future surgeons. The compact, home-type 16 millimeter color motion pictures can be used in this important work.

More color in professional motion pictures is forecast by reports that the lenticular type of color film, although now largely superseded for amateur use, is adaptable to large theater projection. Present color movies are produced by a more complicated and costly method which prevented wider use.

Mathematical Prodigy Is Otherwise Feebleminded

LOUVAIN, BELGIUM.—A twelve-year-old mathematical prodigy who had concentrated so much on his special abilities that in other respects he had a mind like that of a five-year-old child, is described by Prof. Arthur Fauville of the University of Louvain in the Review of Belgian Education. After special training this boy improved greatly, his IQ increasing from 55 to 77 within 15 months.

Death by Rusting May Be Eventual Fate of Earth

Minerals May Absorb All the Oxygen

DEATH by rusting, rather than by freezing when the sun goes out, or in the apocalyptic fires of a Judgment day, may possibly be the eventual fate of the earth. This suggestion is made by Prof. Henry Norris Russell, Princeton university astronomer, writing in the new annual report of the Smithsonian institution.

Oxygen, as everybody now knows, is the real essence of the breath of life. If it were to be wholly removed from the atmosphere of this planet, we should all perish—mouse and man, toadstool and tree. Some rocks contain oxygen, locked up in chemical combination. Sometimes this combination can be cracked, as by volcanic action. Then the oxygen is turned loose, largely as carbon dioxide.

Carbon dioxide is still unbreatheable, but it is eagerly seized upon by plants, which extract the carbon for food manufacture, and return half of the oxygen free. Thus the atmosphere is replenished.

May Absorb All Oxygen.

But there are other rocks, very abundant, too, containing iron in the partly oxidized "ferrous" form. This ferrous oxide is thirsty for more oxygen, to complete its transformation into the "ferrous" form. Ferric oxide is most familiar to us as common iron rust, but it is also responsible for most of the common red rocks and soils.

Professor Russell suggests that eventually the ferrous minerals will absorb all the oxygen in the air, or yet to be released into the air, locking it all up in ferric minerals. The earth will then be without the oxygen-breathing life as we know it. This stage may perhaps already exist on Mars, the rust-red planet.

But it is not due to arrive here tomorrow or the next day. Perhaps in a billion years, says Professor Russell.

Many Have Watched Skies.

Reports from many watchers of the skies, whether of remote nebulae and stars, or of the nearer planets and satellites, or of the doings of the earth's own intimate envelope of gases which we call the atmosphere, are found in the new Smithsonian report.

Possibilities of long-range weather forecasting are dicussed by the Smithsonian institution's secretary, Dr. Charles G. Abbot, and by a British "guest writer," Sir Gilbert T. Walker Doctor Abbot's approach to earth's weather is through the sun's radiation, a subject he had studied for many years. Sir Gilbert sticks to earth, finding correlations between weather today in one part of the earth and the weather some months hence in another place.

120,000,000 Year Old Fish Found in Texas Rock

BERKELEY, CALIF.—A fossil deep-water perch, first of its kind to be found in North America, has been received by the museum of paleontology of the University of California.

The specimen was found near the town of McKinney, Texas, by W. W. Pruett. It was in the center of a limestone rock dug from under the foundation of an old monument. Breaking of the rock revealed the specimen.

In appearance, the specimen is similar to that of the present-day perch, except that it was a marine fish living in deep waters. It was about six inches in length, and was a swift swimmer.

Linked With Kansas Fossils.

The specimen, which belongs to the cretaceous geologic period of about 120,000,000 years ago, helps to complete the picture of marine life as it then existed off the coast of this continent, according to C. J. Hesse, research assistant in the museum here.

Fossil fish of the same geologic epoch have been found in abundance in western Kansas, Mr. Hesse said. But they are mostly near-shore fish. The present discovery is one of the few deep-water fish of the period to be found in North America.

Indians Use More Than Thousand Plant Foods

Washington. — Indians of North American tasted, and found good for food, over a thousand of the plants on the continent.

No less than 1,112 species of plants used in some way as food by Indians are listed in a new publication compiled by a chemist, Elias Yanovsky of the United States bureau of chemistry and soils. The list includes ferns, algae, and fungi and shows that Indian cooks contrived fruit jellies, beverages, soups, breads, and other dishes.

"The Man Who-O-O"

Tales and Traditions from American Political History

BY FRANK E. HAGEN AND ELMO SCOTT WATSON

A CANDIDATE "ANNOUNCES"

ON THE morning of April 4, 1900, the New York World printed what has been described as "one of the most curious announcements of a presidential candidacy ever made, one of the most naive declarations ever given out by any man who had even the briefest parts in American politics."

Admiral George Dewey, the "Hero of Manila," had given an interview in which he said in part: "If the American people want me for this high office, I shall be only too willing to serve them . . Since studying this subject I am convinced that the office of the President is not such a very difficult one to fill, his duties being mainly to execute the laws of Congress. Should I be chosen for this exalted position I would execute the laws of Congress as faithfully as I have always executed the orders of my superior."

"Not such a difficult office to fill," Indeed! That was a jolt to the hero-worshiping American public. Already it had begun to suspect that its idol had feet of clay. It had gone wild over his victory in the Philippines. Upon his return to America, it gave him the reception such as few conquering heroes had. It had built a triumphal arch in his honor in New York and had raised money to buy a house in Washington for him. Not long after his return, he had taken a second wife who was much younger than he was and he had deeded the gift house to her. That didn't sit so well with his worshipers, nor did the social ambitions of his new wife. Moreover, a matter of religious prejudice was injected into the gossip about the Deweys.

Dewey had been approached on the subject of being a candidate for President and had disclaimed any such ambition. But a "Stop Bryan!" element in the Democratic party had persisted in promoting his candidacy and at last he yielded to the temptation.

Then he made his amazing announcement and the public immediately turned against him. Where he had been previously praised, he was now ridiculed. His candidacy was generally characterized as the "climax to a series of unfortunate mistakes." As quickly as that candidacy had blossomed, it withered. America apparently would elect a military hero President, as witness William Henry Harrison, Zachary Taylor and Ulysses S. Grant. But, as for a naval hero,—George Dewey was the first, and so far, the last, to find out that a sea dog isn't wanted in the White House!

A STURDY CAMPAIGNER

THERE is a physical side to this business of campaigning for the presidency.

In the earlier days, candidates went personally into the hinterlands, making, not one-night stands but brief pauses interrupted to move on to a newer and perhaps more fertile field. It was a tremendous strain on them physically.

Today, with improved travel accomodations and the help of radio, campaigning is not the arduous task of former years, but it has its moments.

William Jennings Bryan, torch bearer of extraordinary record in politics, doubtless is the man who proved the sturdiest campaigner of them all. And even he almost broke down.

Bryan was physically fit and energetic when he first stumped the country in 1896, bearing his cross of gold. He insisted on patronizing the local trains, riding in the day coaches at the outset of his tour.

In that campaign, Bryan delivered as many as 20 speeches a day, a great part of them from the rear of his slow-moving train. In Tennessee, his throat began to balk. When this was known, many curatives were pressed upon him. One bottle of a remedy for hoarseness was tested by Benton McMillen of Tennessee and found to contain a caustic fluid which might have injured Bryan permanently.

It was toward the end of that campaign that Bryan began to approach exhaustion. He had completed a three-days' series of speeches in Chicago. Despite his splendid physique, the strain began to tell. He was scheduled to travel north of Chicago when his "loop" engagements were ended. But so trying had been the requirements of his tour that it was necessary to delay the start of the party for more than two hours.

Earliest Settlements

Newport and Portsmouth share with Providence the distinction of being the earliest settlements. After Roger Williams settled at Providence in 1636 another band of religious "outcasts" from Massachusetts, under the leadership of William Coddington and Anne Hutchinson, settled at Portsmouth in 1638. When dissension broke out in this colony William Coddington and a group moved on to Newport in 1639.

Oh, the comfort, the inexpressible comfort of feeling safe with a person—having neither to weigh thought nor measure words, but pouring them all right out just as they are, chaff and grain together; as certain that a faithful hand will take and sift them, keep what is worth keeping, and with the breath of comfort blow the rest away.

Recalling "Glorious Betsy Patterson"

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

WHEN Father Time closes his books for 1936, whom will he write down as "the man of the year" and "the woman of the year"?

Opinions as to the former may differ but it's not likely that there'll be any disagreement on the latter. For the woman whose name has been on every tongue, not only in America, but all over the world, is Mrs. Wallis ("Wally") Simpson of Baltimore, Md. Whether, during the coming year, King Edward VIII of England marries her or doesn't marry her she probably will be, in 1937, as she was in 1936, the most talked-about, most written-about and most pictured woman in the world.

And thus does "history repeat itself" once more. One hundred and thirty-odd years ago another Baltimore woman was also a topic for international discussion because she was the central figure in a royal romance. Whatever may be the future of "Wally" Simpson, hers will have to be a remarkable career indeed if it matches that of "Glorious Betsy" Patterson.

Elizabeth Patterson was the daughter of William Patterson of Baltimore, where she was born February 6, 1785. William Patterson was not only, next to Charles Carroll of Carrollton, the wealthiest man in Maryland, but he was also one of its "leading citizens." When his daughter had reached the age of eighteen, she was no longer just Elizabeth Patterson — she was "Glorious Betsy" Patterson, the belle of Baltimore and one of the most beautiful girls in the history of that city.

WILLIAM PATTERSON

A "Fairy Prince" Coming.

In the autumn of 1803 Baltimore society was a-titter with the news that Jerome Bonaparte, youngest brother of Napoleon, was coming to visit his old comrade-in-arms of the West Indian campaigns, Commodore Joshua Barney of the United States navy.

Jerome did not distinguish himself in that campaign and was glad enough to return to France as a bearer of dispatches to his brother. After becoming involved in sundry escapades, he was sent to sea again, this time as the commander of a ship which cruised about in the West Indies during the hostilities between England and France without, however, seeing any action. One of his boon companions was General Rewbell who had married Harriet Pascault, a French girl living in Baltimore and from young Madame Rewbell Jerome heard of the charms of "Glorious Betsy."

Life in Martinique, where he was stationed, was dull for this gay young blade who was irresistibly attracted to a pretty face. Commodore Barney had invited him to visit Baltimore. So to Baltimore he would go and see his old friend—and also the charming Mademoiselle Patterson—even though it meant the displeasure of the First Consul for him to leave his post of duty in the West Indies.

Jerome went first to New York and Philadelphia where society made much of him. But the real magnet was in Baltimore and there Betsy Patterson awaited with impatience the arrival of this "fairy prince." Betsy first met him at a ball given at the house of Samuel Chase, a signer of the Declaration of Independence, and father-in-law of Commodore Barney. Both of them were apparently fascinated with each other from the start.

The Talk of the Town.

Jerome, with the full knowledge that he would incur the displeasure of Napoleon if he married an American girl instead of some European princess whom the First Consul would select, began an ardent courtship at once. Whether Betsy's equally ardent response was dictated by real love for the handsome young Frenchman or by her ambition is uncertain.

William Patterson, foreseeing Napoleon's refusal to acknowledge the legality of any such marriage, tried in vain to halt the courtship. To his protests Betsy replied that she "would rather be the wife of Jerome Bonaparte for an hour than that of any other man for a lifetime." So he gave his consent to the marriage on the condition that they wait until after Jerome had reached the age of nineteen.

So the marriage was postponed until December 24, 1803. All legal formalities were carefully complied with. The marriage contract was drawn up by Alexander Dallas, later secretary of the treasury and vice-president of the United States. The Most Rev. John Carroll, bishop of Baltimore and founder of Georgetown college, performed the ceremony with many dignitaries present.

After the marriage, Jerome and his bride went on a honeymoon tour which took them to Washington, Philadelphia, New York and Boston where brilliant entertainments were given in their honor. But their happiness in their love was short-lived. Four months later Jerome had his first word from Napoleon. It was an order for him to return to France forthwith—but without his bride. Furthermore, the French consul - general in New York was directed to prohibit all captains of French vessels from receiving on board "the young person to whom Citizen Jerome has connected himself".

That was the answer of Napoleon to Jerome's confidence that his brother would approve of the marriage and to Betsy's confidence that her beauty would win the emperor over when he saw her. But, despite this evidence of Napoleon's hostility, the young couple sailed in March, 1805 in one of William Patterson's fast clipper ships for Lisbon, Spain. There they found a French frigate waiting to prevent Betsy's landing. Still believing that Napoleon could be persuaded to acknowledge the marriage, Jerome prevailed upon Betsy to go on to Amsterdam while he went to Paris to plead her cause with the emperor.

JEROME BONAPARTE

Napoleon Shows His Power.

But even at Amsterdam she found herself thwarted by the power of Napoleon in the form of two French warships which prevented her ship entering the harbor. All that was left her was to seek refuge in England, which she did. So great was the throng which gathered to see her land at Dover that William Pitt sent a regiment of soldiers to keep the crowd in order and prevent any disturbance. Soon after she settled at Camberwell in Surrey, a son, to whom she gave the name of Jerome Napoleon Bonaparte, was born.

Betsy remained in England for three months, constantly receiving messages from Jerome protesting his fidelity and affection. In the meantime Napoleon was bringing a constant pressure to bear upon his brother to get him to repudiate his marriage. The emperor addressed a letter to Pope Pius VII requesting him to declare the marriage void. With the request he sent a costly golden tiara for the pope.

But Pius could not be bribed and he returned the tiara to Napoleon with the reply that careful research revealed he had no authority to grant the emperor's wish. Napoleon, it is said, never forgave Pius for this refusal. He found, however, that the subservient imperial council of state in Paris would do what the pope had refused to do and by this time, Jerome's resistance having been broken down, that body issued a decree annulling the marriage.

Betsy probably was not greatly surprised at this, for she had realized for some time how weak - willed was her husband and after the first ardor of their marriage had cooled, it was probably her ambition rather than her love for Jerome which made her persist in trying to win Napoleon over. Despite the fact that the emperor had balked that ambition, she seems to have had a great admiration for him and without giving up her claim that she was the legitimate wife of Jerome, she accepted a pension of 60,000 francs a year from Napoleon. But she refused a pension of 200,000 francs from Jerome, declaring "I prefer to be sheltered under the wing of an eagle rather than to be suspended from the bill of a goose."

Not Room for Two Queens.

As a reward for deserting his wife, Jerome was made successor to the imperial throne in case Napoleon died leaving no heir and in 1807 he was made King of Westphalia. In the same year he married Princess Fredrica Catherine, daughter of the King of Wurtemburg, and offered his American wife a residence in Westphalia. To that offer she replied, "It is, indeed, a large kingdom but not large enough to hold two queens."

Napoleon's star which had risen so swiftly and so brilliantly began to descend in 1813 and the French were expelled from Germany. Jerome was now a king without a kingdom but after Napoleon's return from Elba, he rejoined his brother and commanded a division in his army during the historic 100 days while the emperor's star flamed again in the skies. Then it descended for all time at Waterloo and St. Helena ended his dream of empire.

Gone now was Betsy Patterson's hope of ever reigning as a queen. In 1815, by a special act of the Maryland legislature, she divorced Jerome to prevent his claiming any share of her fortune. In that year she returned to Europe. A new ambition was stirring in her. She had reconciled herself to never becoming the wife of a ruler but she might be the mother of one. If ever the Bonaparte dynasty were restored, her son, Jerome Napoleon Bonaparte, might be called to the throne. So she dedicated her life to bringing about that event.

Meanwhile the Bourbon dynasty had been restored in France and Louis XVIII had begun his short-lived reign. But despite this fact, "Glorious Betsy" (for she was still a beautiful and charming woman) still dreamed of seeing her son become emperor of the French. Young Jerome did not share his mother's ambition for him. He wanted to be an American citizen and live a normal American life. So, during a visit to America, unknown to his mother (but with the hearty approval of old William Patterson, his grandfather) he wooed and won Susan Williams, a Baltimore girl.

Betsy Patterson Bonaparte screamed with rage when she heard the news of her son's marriage. For a long time she continued unreconciled to the match. She refused to send any message of congratulation when a son was born to Jerome Napoleon Bonaparte and Susan Williams Bonaparte on November 5, 1830. But eventually she forgave her son and her heart warmed to her grandson, who also bore the name of Jerome Napoleon Bonaparte.

Into the Third Generation.

As he grew older she began to dream her dream again. If her son could not become emperor of the French, perhaps her grandson might. So she watched his career with pride—graduation from West Point, a short term of service in the United States army, then, at her suggestion, he resigned to enter a French regiment. He won distinction in the Franco-Prussian war and after the fall of the second empire, when Napoleon III lost his throne, her hopes soared high Then her castles in the air came crashing down about her ears once more

For her grandson, instead of remaining in Europe to take advantage of any opportunity which might come to him in the swirl of French politics, came back to America—and married an American woman! She was Mrs. Newbolt Edgar, a rich young American widow whom he had met in Paris. Again "Glorious Betsy" raged but eventually forgave him for after the deposed Napoleon III had died there was revival of talk of a restoration of the empire. There was still the possibility that her grandson might be called to the throne

But that possibility was never realized for on April 4, 1879 death came at last for "Glorious Betsy" Patterson. Her amazing career had covered the span of nearly a century.

She had wanted to be the wife of the king, then the mother of an emperor, then the grandmother of an emperor. And in all of these she failed. One wonders if there would have been some recompense for her if she had lived to see one of her grandsons rise to a high position in the land of her birth. For one of her grandsons, Charles Joseph Bonaparte, the younger son of Jerome Napoleon Bonaparte, became first the secretary of the navy and later attorney-general in the cabinet of President Theodore Roosevelt.

But it is doubtful if even this distinction for one of her blood would have been any satisfaction to her For three-quarters of a century the golden bees of Napoleon had buzzed in her ears their deceptive promises of a false hope. She was determined that the world should look upon her as royalty. Anything less than that she could not accept if she were true to the ideal she had set for herself in her dreams. That was her tragedy—not without its comic aspects—the tragedy of "Glorious Betsy" Patterson.

End of the Treaty
Millions for New Farms
Too Many Apologies
The Mirror Monocle

Chancellor Hitler has demolished the remaining fragments of the Versailles treaty, notifying the great powers that they may no longer control, as they have done since 1918, the principal rivers of Germany.

Arthur Brisbane

The Rhine, Elbe, Oder and Danube rivers, within German territory, now return to German control and France is content to ask other powers to join a protest. Mere protests amount to little in European diplomacy, as the world learned from the Ethiopian war.

That settles, finally, the Versailles treaty, a foolish effort to enslave a nation that made the emergence of this, or some other, Hitler inevitable.

Mr. Tugwell seeks an appropriation of five hundred million dollars to provide poverty - stricken farmers, now on worthless farms, with other land that will support them; also barns, houses, out-buildings. He thinks $50,000,000 a year for ten years would do the work, and plans to vacate 9,000,000 "worthless acres."

---

Anything that will diminish human misery is desirable, even though incompetency may be in part responsible for the trouble.

In England, the government, guided by experts, is making excellent pasture lands of soil that was worthless. Our government might investigate that process.

General Markham, chief army engineer, advises putting an air base in the harbor of our Midway island, far away in the Pacific ocean. The War Department says, apologetically, that this would be a commercial development, although it might be useful for defense.

Why an apology? Nobody in Europe, Asia or Africa apologizes to us for building an air base, or asks our opinion about it.

The War department says there is no treaty obligation forbidding such an air base. If there were, what of it? Treaties can be cancelled, and should be when they are foolish or unjust—for further details, ask Hitler.

Germans are said to be wearing a new eyeglass called a "spy monocle." Arranged to look like the ordinary single eyeglass, the "spy monocle" is arranged with a mirror, permitting the wearer to look behind him and see if there is anybody listening to his conversation. German police eagerly discourage any one who suggests that the Nazi government is not perfect.

---

The opening of the Bay bridge, connecting San Francisco and Oakland, California, is important not only to California and the two united cities, but to the whole country.

This magnificent bridge, eliminating ferries on the bay that separates San Francisco and Oakland, is a magnificent accomplishment of engineering and public spirit.

Mr. Green's American Federation of Labor decides on a "fight to a showdown" with Mr. Lewis' "Committee for Industrial Organization," which wants to unionize all the 30,000,000 workers not yet organized, and seems to include taking over Mr. Green and his federation also.

Next on the program appears to be a big labor fight: Mr. Green is thoughtful, wise; Mr. Lewis is forceful, determined. The outcome cannot be predicted. The outside citizen will pray that there may not be too much interference with returning prosperity.

A greatly increased demand for tools shows that more men are getting jobs, and announcements of new wage increases, big and little, are many. Twenty-three more firms have announced better wages for 28,000 more workers.

An average increase of $130 a year, less than 50 cents a day, might seem unimportant, but it means one hundred and thirty million more dollars that 1,000,000 workers will have to spend, in a year. That is not unimportant.

England intends next time to devote her energy and strength to protecting herself.

Sir Samuel Hoare, first lord of the admiralty, says England has no "commitments" like those of 1914, that would compel her to send troops to the continent if war should start. She will do as she pleases, which means that she will probably stay at home, busy with enemy airplanes, perhaps helping to finance friends on the continent, as she did in the Napoleonic wars, as she did before and since.

Indian Domesticity

The Hopi Indians can teach the rest of the country gentleness and courtesy, says Alice Booth in a travel article in Good Housekeeping. Here are some discoveries she made about their way of living:

"You never have any scolding in a Hopi house. There is never any bickering, any loud-voiced argument. Indian children are not fretted and worried If a child becomes really obstreperous, he is simply ignored, and there is nothing on earth that hurts a child so much. . . If a woman wants to divorce her husband, all she has to do is to take a piece of his clothing and throw it outdoors. He has to follow. But divorce is practically unknown. . . It is a safe bet that you will never in your life find out anything that an Indian really does not want you to find out."

How Many Pennies Your Child's Life?

Don't Try to "Save" on Home Remedies—Ask Your Doctor

There is one point, on which practically all doctors agree. That is: Don't give your child unknown remedies without asking your doctor first.

All mothers know this. But sometimes the instinct to save a few pennies by buying "something just as good" overcomes caution.

When it comes to the widely used children's remedy — "milk of magnesia" — many doctors for over half a century have said "PHILLIPS." For Phillips' Milk of Magnesia is the standard of the world. Safe for children.

Keep this in mind, and say "PHILLIPS' MILK OF MAGNESIA" when you buy. Comes now, also in tablet form. Get the form you prefer. But see that what you get is labeled "Genuine Phillips' Milk of Magnesia." 25¢ for a big box of the tablets at drug stores.

ALSO IN TABLET FORM: Each tiny tablet is the equivalent of a teaspoonful of genuine Phillips' Milk of Magnesia.

Rid Yourself of Kidney Poisons

DO you suffer burning, scanty or too frequent urination, backache, headache, dizziness, loss of energy, leg pains, swellings and puffiness under the eyes? Are you tired, nervous—feel all unstrung and don't know what is wrong?

Then give some thought to your kidneys. Be sure they function properly for functional kidney disorder permits excess waste to stay in the blood, and to poison and upset the whole system.

Use Doan's Pills. Doan's are for the kidneys only. They are recommended the world over. You can get the genuine, time-tested Doan's at any drug store.

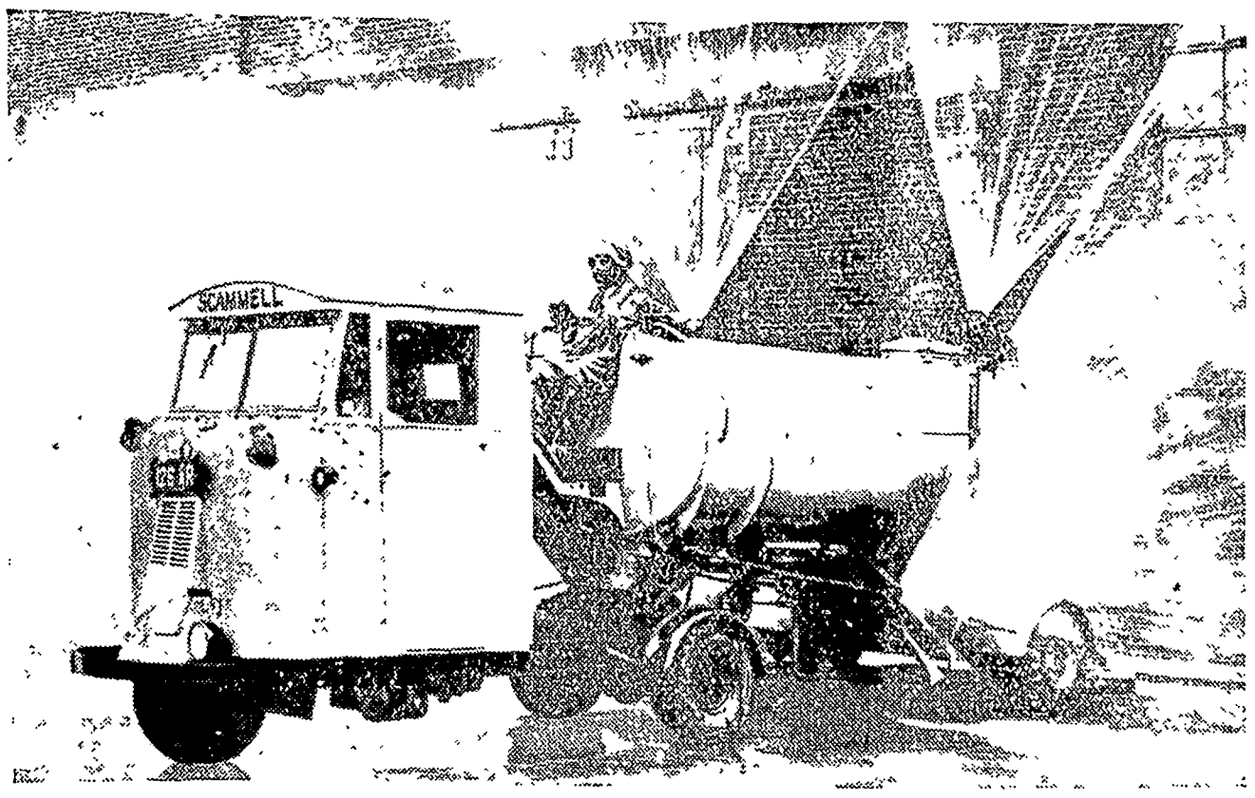
Street Cleaning Truck Can Battle Poison Gas



The latest development in military defense against gas attack makes use of the ordinarily un-war-like street cleaning truck. An auxiliary apparatus, attached to the truck, throws out jets of water to disperse poison gas in the air, and also sends out fan shaped sprays of water to cleanse walls and roofs which have been contaminated by poison gas. A demonstration of the new equipment is shown in London with the "crew" of the truck clad in gas proof clothing, complete with mask.

OTTUMWA, (AP)—John Wyatt, proprietor of an Ottumwa tavern, has been saving his money to buy a new automobile.

Having accumulated $1,200 in bills, Wyatt hid the roll in an old oven in the kitchen of his tavern Thursday afternoon.

About 2 hours later, a waitress, not knowing of the money, lighted the oven to prepare some food.

Early Friday, Wyatt reached in to get his money and pulled out a handful of ashes.

Vagabonds Play First Home Game

VAGABONDS SPLIT TWO WITH GOLDFIELD INDIES

Led by N. Freeman with 14 points, the Goldfield Indies romp- ed over the Klemme Vagabonds, to the tune of 46 to 24, last Monday night on the local floor.

Although Klemme started the scoring when Keeper sank one from mid-court, the Indies came back with the same thing, only more of it, and were never behind during the rest of the game The score at the half was 22 to 16 in favor of Goldfield, and from that point on it mounted steadily high- er.

The Vagbonds should not be discouraged however, as that was the first game the boys had played together. With a little more prac- tice they should make a formid- able opponent for any team in this part of the country.

Kilgore and Hartzell led the scoring for the Vagabonds with seven and six points respectively.

Vagabond Reserves won their game by a score of 36 to 11. Tanner was high with 24 points.

The Office-Holder Is Your Employe

By RAYMOND PITCAIRN

National Chairman Sentinels of the Republic

No business enterprise of any impor- tance can depend for success on the knowledge and ability of its top ex- ecutives alone.

It must rely also on the quality and training of the men in the ranks— whether they labor in office or shop or field.

Within recent weeks there has be- come evident a growing conviction that this is also true of government.

Both at Washington and elsewhere plans are being discussed for better training of the non-coms and privates who hold or look forward to jobs in the public service. A federal agency has recently recommended such training as a step towards economy and efficiency Its proposals are supported by private research groups which have studied the problem independently, by colleges of high standing which offer courses lead- ing to careers in the public service, and by various state and municipal governments which encourage special training for their own employes.

But the one who should be most deeply concerned is the average worker and taxpayer. Why?

Because he, in the last analysis, is the real employer. He—with millions of his fellow citizens—constitutes the govern- ment, whether federal, state or local. He doesn't merely share in its benefits; he meets all its bills—including the pay- roll. The higher the quality of the public service for which he pays, the more he gets for his money.

And the service is likely to be higher in quality if his employes are chosen and retained on the basis of what they know rather than that of whom they know. Not only that, but the field is likely to be less overcrowded—therefore, less costly to the taxpayer who foots the bill.

If the American citizen would get his money's worth he must insist on ability not only in the top offices of govern- ment, but in the lesser jobs as well. This, too, becomes part of his responsi- bility as a shareholder in the most im- portant business on earth.

The office-holder is his employe.

CUP OF DEATH

The above scene shows the finale of a crash between two trucks, hurtling through a concrete bridge approach with a crushing impact as if a piece of frosting were flicked from a birthday cake

Figures reveal that the rate of death last year per accident on highways and at rural intersections was 215 per cent greater than be- tween city street intersections at city street intersections

Such a trend indicates that civic regulations Civic and trade organizations and the public gener- ally are being stirred into action to "do something about it"

It is pointed out that highways are being pressed into such ab- normal and extraordinary uses by truck operations for private gain. The serious inroads on the business of small town merchants is being felt more keenly today than ever before the unregulated trucker cuts into established channels of trading in these small com- munity centers

LONG-HAULER CRASHES

This long distance trucker of tires and tubes from Akron, Ohio, had passed through four states with his 8-ton cargo when he crashed into a motor car with such force that the pleasure car was demolished and the truck overturned.

The press of the country-news- papers and periodicals—is lending every support to constructive pro- grams for reducing the highway death rate, bodily injuries and de- struction of property.

In the Southwest, 84 civic and trade associations have pledged a united front in demanding better state regulations to govern the operations of trucks on highways. These important trade groups are centering their attention on the need for sane safety laws and regulations to bring merchandising operations of itinerant trucker- peddlers under state jurisdiction.

Nations Prosper As They Are Free

By RAYMOND PITCAIRN

National Chairman Sentinels of the Republic

"Countries are well cultivated, not as they are fertile, but as they are free."

That axiom, pronounced many years ago, remains true today Now, as then, it applies not only to the soil, but to every form of productive activity — whether at the farm, the factory, the store, the office or the laboratory

It was through the freedom of her workers — not political liberty alone, but the freedom of unfettered energy — that America became great

It was largely because of this freedom that the standard of living for all Americans became the highest in his- tory, while the workers of Europe — hampered by government edicts and re- strictions — lagged far behind.

It was this freedom of enterprise that converted our central plains into earth's greatest granary, that released our hid- den mineral wealth for world-wide utility; that transformed the experi- ments of the scientific laboratory into the realities of every-day life and use

It was this freedom that gave the American workers more and better farms, more and better homes, more and better food, more automobiles, more telephones, more radios, more comforts of all kinds, than any people on earth.

Let's remember these things through the months immediately ahead. Let's remind those in whose hands we have placed the reins of government that it was freedom of opportunity and of labor that made America what it is.

Let's ask them — with our help — to sweep away all the barriers that block the road to recovery, and to let the American people press forward as they did during the period of their greatest development, free from the handicap of bureaucratic edicts, whether past or present or future.

Let's impress on them anew that countries are well cultivated, not as they are fertile, but as they are free.

And that means freedom of our in- telligence, our energies, and our spirit, as well as of our persons.

(By K. H. S. Sports Writer)

The Klemme High School Sham- rocks started off in the win col- umn in the Seven Eagles Confer- ence race when they defeated Wo- den High by a score of 33 to 20 on the local floor last Friday night The Shamrocks were paced by Jorgenson, who garnered thirteen points, and Kaduce, who collected ten; but the whole team contribut- ed to the victory by their team work.

Woden appeared small beside the local boys, but they showed a world of fight and made it an in- teresting battle all the way thru Gerdes and Helm proved to be dangerous men for the visitors, getting ten and eight points re- spectively.

Little Shamrocks Win

The Little Shamrocks, untrue to their name, towered above their visiting opponents, and a runaway score seemed to be the only possi- ble out come at the beginning of the game. At the beginning of the second quarter, Coach Kingery be- gan putting in second team sub- stitutes, and they held their own until half time. During the third quarter, however, a young man by the name of Gerdes went on a scoring rampage, and the visitors forged into a lead. Coach Kingery called back his starting lineup, and Lemke, Paul, and Trampel soon had the game out of danger. The final score was 32 to 18 in fav- or of Klemme's Little Shamrocks.

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted
by William Bruckart

National Press Building Washington, D. C.

Washington. — Many observers around Washington lately have noticed something of a change in President Roosevelt's attitude since the election which so overwhelmingly returned him to office. From most any standpoint you assume, you will note, I believe, a more critical attitude on the part of the President concerning the schemes advanced by his advisers. He is apparently examining the suggestions, the proposals and programs laid before him much more cautiously and carefully than was his record during the past three years.

Change in Roosevelt

It is yet too early to catalog this attitude as a change on Mr. Roosevelt's part but surely it is noticeable. If he continues it, it is all to the good for the country. If he continues it, it cannot fail to mean better administration, better legislation, sounder national policies. It necessarily must mean as well, that there will be fewer of the half-baked ideas, plans which the President had not considered fully, programs he had not thought through.

One of the important indicators of this changed attitude on the part of Mr. Roosevelt comes in the form of an announcement in which Mr. Roosevelt named a committee of outstanding agricultural authorities and citizens whose job is to prepare a long-term program for alleviation of the farm tenant problem, if not its complete eradication. Secretary Wallace will head this committee which is to report early in February and the appointment of Mr. Wallace to this job incidentally seems to assure his retention as head of the Department of Agriculture—and there had been some question whether he would remain.

Of course, the farm tenant problem long has been a cancerous growth on American agriculture. It has been spreading. Previously, I have reported in these columns how official figures disclosed an increasing number of farms operated by tenants and owned by absentee landlords. It has been a problem for some years and seems to be growing more acute. Hence, the President's move would seem to mean that the federal government is going to put its hand to the oar and try, at least, to do something about it.

Now, it may mean that the federal government will create another billion dollar government - owned corporation or it may mean subsidies or any one of a number of other federal aids. I do not want to prejudge it, however, because certainly the President is to be commended in approaching the problem in a sensible way, namely, the creation of a committee to give the question a thoroughgoing analysis before legislation to alleviate the condition is proposed.

What It May Mean

That is what makes it so significant. A year or two or three ago, some braintruster sitting in a cobwebby office would have suddenly had a thought about the "renters" and other types of farm tenants; he would have felt very sorry for them and would have determined in his own mind that they must be made the beneficiaries of "the more abundant life" right quickly. He would have sought and obtained an appointment with the President; would have related the beautiful picture he had conceived in his own limited mentality and, in all probability, Mr. Roosevelt would have shouted, "fine, fine."

The next thing that would have happened would have been the drafting of a piece of legislation for submission to congress. It would have gone to Capitol Hill with the stamp of administration approval and all of the automatons of the house and senate who owed their positions to Roosevelt blessings, would have voted for it. It would have become law without serious debate and, as in most cases, without most of the representatives and senators having understood what it was all about. The results of such legislation are beginning to show and it is going to be necessary to remake a great deal of it. The trouble was that these theorists and impractical men never were able to see more than one narrow phase of the problem with which they were dealing and Mr. Roosevelt did not take the time to find out for himself what all of the factors were.

It is quite evident, therefore, that one thing the New Deal sadly needs is more co-ordination among its own people.

I referred above to the necessity for co-ordination among governmental departments as to policies and that leads into the long-time need for actual reorganization of the physical structure known as the federal government. There are certain signs emerging from the seething now occurring, as is usual, in advance of a congressional session that indicate President Roosevelt may be making a definite move towards this much needed reorganization.

Changes Needed

It is highly important that it be done. I think everyone agrees with that statement. Mr. Roosevelt is in a position to do it. He is one of the few Presidents of recent years who has been in a position to do it. He is in that position because of the tremendous majority his party possesses in house and senate and I think it can be said unequivocably, if Mr. Roosevelt cannot do it or does not do it, it never will be done.

It goes without saying that there are scores of unnecessary agencies now in existence, most of them the children of the New Deal. There is overlapping; there is conflict of jurisdiction and there is a superabundance of ideas from every source that affect or influence operations of other agencies. It is a tangled skein and the untangling is going to be a difficult job. The whole setup is shot through with politics and politicians and to decapitate political patronage is a man-sized job. The job now may be made even worse in this regard by the fact that never in history have there been so many shades of opinion in congress. The natural result of this sort of thing is that the various groups of blocs insist on carrying out particular pet schemes and those pet schemes nearly always mean a new governmental bureau, commission or what have you.

As far as present conditions have developed, none can foretell exactly what Mr. Roosevelt has in mind concerning the new government structure. It goes without saying, of course, that the major departments, each headed by a cabinet officer, will constitute the basic framework of whatever co-ordination or consolidation Mr. Roosevelt eventually proposes. But it is outside of this framework where the real co-ordination is needed. It is among the countless alphabetical soup agencies that the pruning knife and the axe must be wielded with utter abandon. A lot of needless and, in many cases, irresponsible government policies are worked out here. It is among these agencies as well where waste in the form of reckless spending and badly conceived programs has taken place to the greatest extent under the Roosevelt administration.

Such co-ordination and consolidation as the President attempts, therefore, can accomplish a very great deal in the way of budgetary reforms and relief for the taxpayers if the job is undertaken seriously. Indeed, as the situation now shapes up, elimination of about 50 per cent of these so-called emergency agencies and complete eradication of their parasitic policies constitute an important approach to a balancing of the Treasury budget.

Relief for Taxpayers

Since this is a fact, it must be recognized that the proposed consolidation movement has obstacles outside of political patronage. Politicians enjoy spending money and when they see various of their pet bureaus or commissions going the way of all flesh, they naturally will be frightened and it will take all of the strength Mr. Roosevelt possesses to keep them in line when they realize that money is being taken out from under their very noses.

Nevertheless, Mr. Roosevelt can reorganize the government. He has 329 Democratic representatives in the house and 75 Democratic senators. Against this legislative strength of the party in power are 89 Republican representatives and 17 Republican senators, minus three or four senators who wear the Republican label but who are New Dealers at heart.

If Mr. Roosevelt is serious about this government reorganization and if he wants to force it through, I have no doubt at all that he can gain public support for his program. I have no doubt at all that if he were to go on the radio and deliver an address about the plan, there would be such a deluge of mail to representatives and senators from their constituents that they would not dare oppose the scheme. There would be more than one reason for support of the President in this activity. Next to the fact that people out through the country generally hate bureaucrats and red tape in their government, the important reason for the support which Mr. Roosevelt surely could have would come from the taxpayers who are beginning to realize what the federal government is costing them. That is one job that the Republicans did in their campaign to elect Governor Landon of Kansas. They made the country tax conscious and it is an influence that is going to rise up and haunt the New Deal administration and members of congress for some months to come.

As a conclusion, then, it seems to me that Mr. Roosevelt has prepared a test for himself whether he conceived it on that basis or otherwise. Unless he drives through a serious consolidation and elimination of needless agencies, many doubts are going to arise as to his sincerity.

ur Borders Flourish in the Mode

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

OR stirring first page news in regard to im- rtant style trends, look the borderlines of hion—which is by way calling attention to the ectacular role border eatments are playing roughout costume design this sea- n

Not only are sumptuous fur rders flourishing in the mode, t designers are performing all rts of tricks with borderings and ndings of silks, velvets cut on as, laces, ribbons, braids, em- roidered bandings and glittering velties of various sorts.

To get some idea of the glamor nd glory of the situation let fancy un to this—a youthful and enchant- g quaint full-skirted frock of black affeta the hemline of which is bor- ered with wide Roman-striped ibbon in flamboyant red, yellow, lue and green. Somewhere on the odice a bit of this bizarre bordering lays up to the gaiety of the skirt emline, and the effect is all that ou might suppose and then some. However, it is not that just eve- ing costumes are doing the hon- rs with borders, for the demure treet gown has subscribed to the order idea with an enthusiasm hat knows no bounds. It is ultra hic for the very new and smart ircular - cut daytime dresses of heer black wool, or of the now-so- much-talked-of suede cloth, duve- yn or broadcloth to be outlined with a banding formed of braid or tiny grosgrain ribbon in the gay and lively Tyrolean colors or corona- ion reds, purples and blues.

So completely has the idea of borders and bindings captured the fancy of designers, they do not stop at mere hemline borderings, for not infrequently they allow applied bands or inserts of lace, ribbon or what-not to run around and around the skirt and the bodice, one row spaced above another. Indeed this use of unique and versatile border, band and binding treatments is well worth watching, for fashion's spotlight is cast direct upon them.

As to the smart fur borders that are giving high distinction to autumn and winter fashions they are staging just one thrill after another.

The three modes pictured typify newest gestures in border treatments. Handsome gray wolf collars and borders the coat of black novelty-weave woolens shown to the left. This brings up the importance of gray fur trimmings on black. The hue and cry for gray furs gains momentum as the season advances.

A fashion which is taking well is the fur-bordered tunic coat. To the right in the picture you see an interesting version of the general favorite.

The coat centered in the group is new among the newest. In the first place it is all gray and throughout the world of fashion the praises of gray are being sung. In this instance the material is a stunning gray basket wool weave with a wide bordering of gray caracul up-and-down the front. This method of bordering with fur is the "last word."

BLACK WITH JEWELS

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

Black with a splash of high color is the call - supreme in fashion's realm for this fall and winter. The right kind of an all-black gown, coat ensemble or suit, with the right kind of colorful costume jewelry works out the idea to a nicety as the picture herewith assures. Solid black high-lighted by bracelets and finger ring of crystal and rhinestones, creates the dramatic costume here shown. Circular plaques of prystal studded with simulated sapphire cabochons, and joined with rhinestone links, form two of the bracelets. The third bracelet consists of two one-and-a-half-inch wide plaques each going half way round the arm, joined by crystal and rhinestone links. The cabochon back and front is set with a myriad of rhinestones. The ring is a rectangular sapphire stone set in prystal. The modish high crowned hat is of black matal see jersey.

VIONNET CHANGES SILHOUETTE STYLES

Henna brown and burnt orange are the two new shades stressed by Vionnet in her new winter collection. These soft autumn shades are well adapted to tweed sports clothes and are shown in two and three piece tailored suits, simple woolen street dresses and even in afternoon clothes combined with brown or black.

The Vionnet silhouette has been slightly changed in that skirts are fuller and a bit longer—coming to well below the mid-calf line. Broadened and padded sleeves are used throughout to emphasize the shoulder line and many of the sleeves are fashioned loose and open at the wrist.

Street and afternoon dresses are made with severely high necks in front which are often caught down with clips of brilliants.

Combine Wool and Fur in Smartest New Costumes

Wool and fur are combined to provide some of the most striking costumes for fall days in town, on the campus and even in the country. The luxurious ones, of course, star silver fox, sable and mink and are destined to be worn only by the chosen few. Equally smart but less expensive types make use of semi-precious and casual furs. These include suave woolen dresses with fur jackets or coats that are warm enough for now. The dresses can go under heavier coats when the weather gets colder and back under the little fur jackets in early spring. Kidskin is the favorite right now.

Buttons Go Sporty

"Fingerprints" of Metals Used to Forecast Failure

X-Ray Test Will Show the "Laue Pattern"

Cleveland, Ohio.—How science is studying the X-ray "fingerprints" of metals in the hope of being able to forecast the failure of airplane propellers and other metal structures was described at a meeting of the American Society of Metals here by Dr. Charles S. Barrett of the department of metallurgy of Carnegie Institute of Technology, Pittsburgh, Pa.

Within some limits, explained Dr. Barrett, it is now possible to examine by X-rays a piece of metal suspected of fatigue and possible impending failure, and obtain some idea of the internal damage which has already occurred in it.

How the Test Works.

A specimen piece of metal from an airplane propeller (for example) is placed in front of an X-ray tube and the piercing X-radiation passed through it. The little metal crystals bend the X-rays into a design named the Laue pattern after their famous European discoverer. The pattern, characteristic for each metal, looks like rings of tiny spots arranged in circles with somewhat the appearance of tree rings.

Fresh new metal, which has never been stressed in actual use, shows one kind of Laue X-ray pattern and a similar piece of the metal, except that it has been in use, will show a slightly different pattern.

This change in the X-ray "fingerprints" of metals with age is quite different from what happens to human fingerprints. From infancy to old age the pattern of fingerprints remains unchanged and this is the basis of their use in identification and police work.

Comparison Is Necessary.

Where it is possible to have test samples of metal in the laboratory and have on record an X-ray pattern for varying lengths of metal life and fatigue, the state of another piece of metal can roughly be compared, said Dr. Barrett.

In theory at least, if a piece of metal broke after 2,000,000 flexings with a load of 20,000 pounds to the square inch, and showed a characteristic pattern, it would be possible to tell roughly how near another piece of similar metal—used in an airplane propeller—might be to fracture and failure.

Fossil Insects of Dinosaur Age Are Found in Amber

Cambridge, Mass. — Fossil insects of the Cretaceous, the twilight age of the dinosaurs, have been collected in northern Canada by methods reminiscent of gold rush days in the Yukon, by Profs. Charles T. Brues and F. M. Carpenter of Harvard university.

The insects are embedded in lumps of amber and are the first of this age to be found, as the Baltic amber of Europe is of more recent Tertiary origin. Millions of years ago, when the amber was oozing pitch on the trunks of conifer trees, they got stuck and embedded. Then the gummy stuff was buried, and slowly hardened to amber, giving its victims a truly royal entombment.

Professor Brues led a small party far into northern Manitoba. They pitched camp on the shores of an isolated lake, where amber was known to occur.

Instead of a continuous shore of sand, mud or rock, this lake beach is formed of ground-up wood. The battered debris from logs and trees washed into the lake by the Saskatchewan river forms this unusual shoreline material. In this the small lumps of amber are included.

"Panned" the Fossils.

Dr. Brues and his party shoveled this wooden "sand" into pans, and washed it in a stream in the approved gold-panning ritual. The heavy amber settled to the bottom, and the lighter wood fragments were washed over the edge. In this way the party accumulated a quantity of amber bits weighing altogether about 400 pounds.

They have not yet had time, since returning to the laboratory, to give this amber treasure more than a swift preliminary looking over. Detailed examination will require many months of work.

Change in Matter Is Continuous, Say Scientists

Heraclitus' Theory Contained Truth

IN ANCIENT Greece, a philosopher named Heraclitus concluded that all matter was ultimately composed of fire. On looking about him he noticed that nothing in the material world seemed to "stay put." Everything was in a state of flux. And, since the crackling flames of burning wood seemed to change more often than anything else he knew of he decided that fire was at the bottom of it all.

Now, while modern science does not agree with Heraclitus' theory as to what matter is made of, it does agree with him concerning the omnipresence of change. It has, in fact, gone much farther than Heraclitus ever could in studying the occurrence of very slow changes of which the average man never dreams.

A piece of gold, for instance, is one of those things which we feel sure will remain as it was when we last saw it. And so it will, practically speaking. But according to recent experiments at Kaiser Wilhelm institute by W. Seith and E. A. Peretti, solid metals can flow right into one another.

Gases Seep Through Metals.

Gases also may seep slowly through solid metals, it has been found by C. J. Smithells and C. E. Ranslet of the British General Electric company. Strictly speaking, it is impossible to confine nitrogen forever in an iron tank. The nitrogen atoms are continuously worming their way between the iron atoms of which the confining walls are built.

The eternal motion with which all atoms are endowed is the cause of all such kinds of diffusion. And this motion is identified by scientists with heat. So, in a very vague and incomplete sense, Heraclitus' intuition may be said to contain a grain of truth.

Cosmic Rays Take Part.

Cosmic rays, too, have a share in the incessant change about us. Not even the rock of Gibraltar escapes from the disintegrating action of this bombardment from distant stars and galaxies.

But why bother with such slow changes which may require aeons before their effect is noticeable? The answer to this question involves the raison d'etre of all pure science. Paradoxically, enough, the goal of the study of changes is the discovery of those things which are permanent—the laws of nature.

Butterfly's "Trunk" Is Explained by Delaware Scientist

Newark, Del.—Butterflies and moths uncoil their long probosces, or "trunks," on very much the same principle as that used in the toy paper "snakes" that startlingly dart into your face at carnivals or parties, blown out of a tight coil by the breath of some fellow-reveller.

This simple mechanical explanation of one of biology's most difficult riddles has been discovered by Dr. J. B. Schmitt of the University of Delaware.

In Two Sections.

A butterfly's proboscis is not a simple tube or pipe. It is made of two trough-shaped sections, held together at the edges, so that it "adds up" as a tube through which the insect can suck up flower juices.

In each half, beneath the trough, there is a tube, closed at the outer tip, but communicating with the head-cavity at its base. Each of these tubes is filled with blood. Normally, the proboscis is kept coiled by the pull of many short muscles, arranged diagonally. But when the insect is ready to feed, a valve closes at the base of each tube, preventing the blood from flowing back into the head. At the same time, certain muscles squeeze down on the base of the tube, like a hand on a rubber bulb. This puts pressure on the fluid, which has nowhere to go but out, so that it pushes out into the tube and straightens it out.

Porous Tiles Made With Gas-Forming Substance

Zurich, Switzerland. — A new type of porous construction block or tile is going into production here. It is made by a method like that used for cement, except that gas-forming substances are added to the water.

An important feature of the process is that the specific gravity of the resulting material and the size of the cells can be regulated at will through the quantity of the gas-forming material. Thus it is possible to make extremely light building tiles having a specific gravity only half that of dry wood.

Simple But Smart Models

MATRON, maid, or tiny miss—your attention please. For assembled here are three lovely frocks to brighten your wardrobes. All are designed to be made at home, quickly and inexpensively, and each is accompanied by a step-by-step instruction chart which makes sewing a real pleasure and recreation.

The lovely and graceful daytime or afternoon frock, Pattern 1949, features a novel yet simple yoke and collar treatment, a clever swing skirt, and youthful sleeves, long or short. Chic and stylish, yet as simple as can be, it will make up beautifully in sizes 12, 14, 16, 18, and 20 (30 to 38 bust measure), and size 14, with short sleeves, requires just 3⅞ yards of 39 inch material.

The comely morning frock which steals the center, Pattern 1973, is available in a wide range of sizes and takes top honors for comfort and versatility. Requiring just five simple pieces including the belt, it goes together like a charm, to fit perfectly and make your morning chores so much lighter. The pointed yoke is slimming, the set-in sleeves are free and open, and the skirt is dart fitted at the waist. As easy to make as to wear, this pattern is designed for sizes 36, 38, 40, 42, 44, 46, 48, 50, and 52. Send for it today. Size 38 requires just 3⅝ yards of 35 inch fabric, dimity or percale or gingham or seersucker.

The tempting model for tiny tots, Pattern 1944, is likewise utterly simple to make, yet as cunning as can be. Good for party or for play, it is a pattern you can cut twice and save for future use in any of a wide range of fabrics. The tiny puff sleeves are cut in one with the shoulder with just two simple pieces for the front and back of the dress. The size range—six months, one, two and three years. The one year size requires 1⅝ yards of 36 inch material, and if you wish you can make the pockets, cuffs and facings in contrast.

Send for the Barbara Bell Fall and Winter Pattern Book containing 100 well-planned, easy-to-make patterns. Exclusive fashions for children, young women, and matrons. Send fifteen cents in coins for your copy.

Send your order to The Sewing Circle Pattern Dept., 367 W. Adams St., Chicago, Ill. Patterns 15 cents (in coins) each.

Uncle Phil Says:

That Is Perfection

Perfection does not consist in doing singular things; but it does consist in doing common things singularly well.

Always be sure your friends can grant the favor before you ask it; then there won't be the pain and embarrassment of refusal.

We always feel great admiration for those clever people who can mend something when we break it.

Everyone remembers what a great man says. So much the worse for his reputation for consistency.

Sum total of knowledge gained from century to century makes men wiser; and that's about all.

No two men are exactly alike; and universal democracy can't overcome it.

Those That Tried

Failures are facts that prove a man has at least actually tried to be successful.

Poise is something that keeps one from speaking too suddenly.

The sophisticated person finds little to enjoy. Everything is old to him.

If you want to make your friend happy instead of seeking to have him make you happy, that's the true gold.

A man who knows that his hardships made the best part of his character may not want his son to have hardships.

Admitting our faults is half way to correcting them; but the laziest half.

WARNING GIVEN ON GAS POISON

Running Auto With Doors of Garage Closed Is Dangerous

Have you a rattlesnake in your garage? If you have, he will give you warning before he strikes. "White damp" or carbon monoxide gives no warning: It is treacherous and remorseless, according to a statement prepared by the speakers bureau of the Iowa State Medical society.

"During cold weather the oil in your car becomes stiff, making it slow to start," the statement continued. "You may be tempted to warm it up with the garage doors closed Don't do it. Also, do not get under the car to make adjustments while the motor is running, even though the garage doors are open You may be overcome by carbon monoxide. Years ago, "white damp" was found in mines Today it has come into our garages and homes because of the use of gasolne engines and gas for cooking and heating The housewife as well as the car driver may be its victim if her gas appliances are defective

Has No Oder

" Carbon monoxide is heavier than air , and tends to hug the ground or floor Is colorless, odorless and tasteless, and therefore it gives no warning of its presence. The danger of carbon monoxide poisoning is greatest during the winter months when houses and garages are closed

NEED TO PLAN WINTER FEEDING OF WILD LIFE

Drouth and Grasshoppers Stunted and Depleted Natural Food Reserves

"Planned winter feeding of wild life is much better than emergency feeding," says Thomas G Scott extension wild life specialist at Iowa State College "In the northern states many species of wild life need mans help during the winter.

"The effectiveness of coverts is greatly reduced by the lack of foliage and drifting snow The food supply is severely taxed and gets low in quanity and quality as the winter wears on Some forms of wild life avoid these hardships by hibernating or migrating, but many birds and mammals must face this lack of food and shelter"

Plan By Communities

After making a general survey of the food needs of Iowa wild life for the coming winter, Mr Scott declares that the lack of natural food will be serious this winter Grasshopper infestation and severe drouth have made heavy toll upon the winter supply of natural food for Iowa wild life, and while this reduction of natural food supplies cannot be measured certainly as the farmer counts his crop losses, it is just as surely present

It will be wise to organize planned winter feeding campaigns in each neighborhood, Scott suggests. County agents and conservation officers of each county will help in obtaining the cooperation of grain elevator operators ,business men farmers, hunters, 4-H boys, boy scouts and others

Place Food Before Winter

Food should be placed close to the possible points of need during the critical period, and all available grain should be collected and stored as feed before winter sets in. Arrangments may be made for leaving a shock of corn in the vicinity of natural shelter for bobwhites and such other forms of wild life as may use it, and everything should be in readiness for planned and sustained winter feeding

GUARD YOUR CORN CRIBS

Robberies Reported Already On Several Iowa Farms

Glen Schmidt, state investigation bureau chief, warned Iowa farmers to "tie your dog near the corncrib" because corn thieves, he said, are operating in parts of the state.

The bureau chief said law enforcement officials expect corn stealing will be on the increase during the next month.

With corn selling at about $1 a bushel on the farm, Schmidt said, thieves can realize $200 on the average sized truck load

NO PARK THEN

In the spring of 1854 Ambrose A. Call, a native of Ohio, left Cincinnati to seek a new home west of the Mississippi river. He visited Ft. Des Moines and Fort Dodge on his westward trip but was advised not to journey farther because of the Indians He arrived at the present site of Algona Locating a grove nearby he blazed a walnut tree with his hatchet and wrote on it: "Ambrose A. Call claims this grove July, 10, 1854." Later he built a log cabin and made his home in that grove It was the first claim marked and the first cabin built in what is now Kossuth County This site now constitutes the Ambrose A. Call State Park.

THE DEATH OF MONTGOMERY AT QUEBEC
(From the Painting by Trumbull)

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

HE WAS born just 200 years ago—on December 2, 1736—and the last day of this year—December 31, 1936—marks the one hundred sixty-first anniversary of his untimely death.

That anniversary is more important, perhaps, than most Americans realize. For when a blast of British gunfire from behind a street barricade in old Quebec snuffed out the life of Richard Montgomery, it did more than end what had already become a brilliant military career. It probably affected vitally the history of a whole nation.

Montgomery was an Irishman, the son of a member of the British parliament. Educated at Trinity college in Dublin, he entered the British army as an ensign at the age of eighteen just in time to take part in the last struggle between France and Great Britain for control of the North American continent. Then he was ordered to the West Indies and fought in the campaigns against Martinique and Havana. Then he returned to New York and a short time later went to England where he became intimate with many of the liberal members of parliament.

Friend of the Famous.

He numbered among his friends such men as Edmund Burke, Charles James Fox and Isaac Barre but even their influence could not aid his claims for advancement in the army. So he sold his commission in 1772 and returned to America where he settled down as a farmer at King's Bridge, now a part of New York City. There he met and fell in love with Janet Livingston, the daughter of Judge Robert R. Livingston, a leader in New York colonial affairs, and they were married in 1773.

When the dispute between the colonies and the Mother Country had reached an acute stage, Montgomery had become such an active and public-spirited citizen in his adopted land that he was sent as a delegate from Dutchess county to the first provincial congress in New York City in May, 1775.

While there he received word that the Continental Congress had decided to raise troops to defend colonial rights and that a commission as brigadier-general was to be offered to him. His name was the second on the list of eight who were given that rank and the only one not from New England.

Montgomery was detailed for active duty almost immediately. Ethan Allen and his Green Mountain Boys, aided by Benedict Arnold, had captured Ticonderoga and the path to the conquest of Canada seemed open. Maj. Gen. Philip Schuyler was to lead the expedition with Montgomery as second in command. His wife accompanied him as far north as Saratoga where she bade him goodbye. She never saw him alive again.

A Campaign of Hardships.

Soon after the expedition started, Schuyler fell ill and the command devolved upon Montgomery. Despite the mutinous conduct of his militiamen, the shortage of munitions and the difficulties of travel through the wilderness, Montgomery's campaign began as a brilliant success. He won at Isle aux Noix, reduced the fortress at St. John's won again at Chambly and forced the surrender of Montreal. But Quebec still remained in the hands of the British and Montgomery wrote to congress: "Till Quebec is taken, Canada is unconquered."

Meanwhile Benedict Arnold had made the epic journey with his Continentals and Gen. Daniel Morgan's riflemen through the woods of Maine and were now before Quebec. With winter coming on Montgomery would not have attempted to capture Quebec. But Arnold's arrival forced his hand. Unless he went to the aid of that leader, the sacrifices of Arnold's and Morgan's men would have been in vain.

Montgomery's force was small. Regiments had melted away as men, homesick or dispirited by the hardships they had undergone, deserted his command. He had little confidence in those who remained in the ranks. But despite his forebodings of disaster, he joined Arnold at Pointe aux Tremble, up the river from Quebec.

Incidentally, when Montgomery captured Montreal, one of his prisoners was a young British officer named John Andre but he had sent Andre south as a prisoner of war before reaching Quebec. So Benedict Arnold and John Andre did not see each other then. That fatal meeting was to take place five years later on the banks of the Hudson and as a result the name of Benedict Arnold would become synonymous with the word "traitor" in American history forevermore. In the future that same word would tarnish also the name of another officer serving in this expedition even though a court should declare him innocent of treason. He was Capt. Aaron Burr, who was an aide on Arnold's staff.

Arnold's army consisted of about 600 men and, although the combined forces of the two American commanders were equal to that of Sir Guy Carleton, the governor of Canada, the British had the advantage of more cannon and supplies and the even greater advantage of a fortified position.

On December 9 Montgomery received word that he had been made a major-general for his success in the Canadian campaign. Spurred on by the recognition but even more by the critical situation in which he found himself, Montgomery resolved to attempt the capture of Quebec as soon as possible. The term of enlistment of many of his men was expiring, smallpox was prevalent in the camp and, with winter almost upon them, a prolonged siege of the place was out of the question.

The Plan of Attack.

So the American commander called a council of war at which it was decided to try to carry the city by assault. False attacks were to be made on the St. John's gate and other points along the walls of the upper town to divert the attention of the defenders while the real attacks were to be launched at two places along the river road.

The attack was made early on the morning of December 31 while a snowstorm was raging. Montgomery personally led his men from Wolfe's Cove along the side of the cliff beneath Cape Diamond to a point where a blockhouse stood protected in front of a stockade. Montgomery's men, rushing through the swirling snow easily carried the first barricade easily.

GEN. RICHARD MONTGOMERY

"Men of New York! You will not fear to follow where your general leads!" exclaimed Montgomery as he led them toward the second barricade in the narrow street. Suddenly the portholes in the blockhouse guarding the second barricade were thrown open and a storm of artillery and musketry fire swept the close-packed ranks of the Americans. Montgomery, two of his aides and ten soldiers went down under the withering fire.

Burr, who had been transferred from Arnold's division to Montgomery's, tried in vain to rally the men. But the blast of fire which had killed their leader broke their spirit and they retreated without even trying to recover the body of their commander. If he had survived he might have carried them through to victory. But without his inspiring presence that hope was vain. Meanwhile the British, hearing of the repulse to Montgomery's attack, concentrated their attention on the column led by Arnold and Morgan, trapped it in the narrow streets, captured 400 men and drove the remainder out of the city.

Several hours after the repulse of Montgomery's column, a captured American officer was taken to the barricade where the 13 frozen bodies of his comrades were lying half - covered with drifting snow. He identified that of Montgomery and Carleton, who had known the American leader when he was a British captain, ordered that he be given a military funeral. This was done on January 4, 1776, and he was buried at the Gorge of St. Louis bastion with the governor, lieutenant-governor, the council of Quebec and all the principal officers of the garrison in attendance.

For 42 years Montgomery's body remained in its original burying place. In 1818 it was removed to the city of New York where it was buried beneath the monument erected to his memory in front of St. Paul's church. Although this monument is not such a well - known patriotic shrine as others in that metropolis the fame of Richard Montgomery is perpetuated in the names of no less than 18 counties in as many states of the Union—a number exceeded by only a few other Revolutionary heroes.

Perhaps it is idle to speculate on "what might have been" but there is good reason to believe that the death of Montgomery on that December morning 161 years ago was a more important event in our history than it is usually credited with being. If he had not been killed but had led his men to the victory, which is not improbable, the capture of Quebec would have brought Canada under the domination of the Patriot cause early in the Revolutionary struggle. If that had come about, the long weary struggle of seven years might have been considerably shortened; Benedict Arnold, sharing with Montgomery the laurels of the capture of Quebec would have been spared the bitterness of being denied the laurels he won at Saratoga, would not have fallen a victim to his disappointment and disillusionment and become a traitor, and his name and that of Richard Montgomery might have been written higher on the scroll of the heroes of '76.

One Big Catch
War Comes Closer
More Houses Needed
Would Not Eat Ladies

President Roosevelt, interrupting his journey to attend to official business, did a little fishing from a whale boat off Port-of-Spain. It was poor fishing, but the President did not complain; he caught something worth while on election day—to catch forty-six out of a possible forty-eight fish is good fishing.

Europe and Asia seem to be getting a little closer to war, although many wise ones think it still far off.

Germany admits willingness to side with Japan in a fight against bolshevism. Practical Stalin, man of few words, tells Japan what he thinks of her pact with Germany by refusing to renew a treaty that permits Japan to fish in Russian waters off the coast of eastern Siberia.

That fishing privilege is vitally important to the feeding of Japan's surplus millions, increasing at the rate of one million new Japanese every year.

Langdon Post, New York's commissioner of housing, tells the American Federation of Labor that a great national shortage of houses exists, because there has been no building. New York City, especially, is in a bad way, according to Mr. Post; there the shortage in housing "may have tragic consequences."

---

That is good news for the building trades, and temporarily good news for landlords; they will not overbuild. As usual, politicians will seize the opportunity to raise taxes, and presently money lenders will be once more selling real estate under foreclosures.

Life is a brief game of seesaw—now up, that is prosperity; then down, that is depression. The budget is not the only thing that needs balancing.

Our neighbor, Nicaragua, well advanced in modern intelligence, establishes a military flying school, orders fighting planes from the United States, hires a first-class instructor. There is progresss everywhere, and you realize it when you read in chapter 26 of Westermarck's "The Origin and Development of the Moral Ideas":

In ancient Nicaragua women were held unworthy to perform any duty in connection with the temples, and were immolated outside the temple ground of the large sanctuaries, and even their flesh was unclean food for the high priest, who accordingly ate only the flesh of males.

What a jump from a civilization in which the high priest would not eat ladies that had been slaughtered to a modern air school in which young Nicaraguan women, once excluded from the temples, will be allowed to fly planes and learn how to release bombs!

Schumann - Heink, artist of the operatic stage, and a fine example to all women, is dead at seventy-five.

Young ladies who say "I can't have children because I must have a career," and sometimes have neither, please observe that Mme. Schumann - Heink had a magnificent artistic career and many children also, including two boys killed in the big war, and one on a submarine, who survived.

Winston Churchill, able Englishman, thinks Great Britain, France and the United States should remain "one in support of democracy," and calls the United States "a child of our blood and ideals." This country is the child of many different kinds of blood and ideals. Greater New York includes the biggest Italian city in the world, bigger than Rome or Milan; more than a million of Italian birth or descent. The same New York contains two million jews, many more than ever were in Palestine.

---

Colombia has written a new constitution, authorizing its government, among other things, to confiscate private property without paying the owners. Conservative citizens of Colombia call that "communistic," which seems hardly an exaggeration.

---

More pay increases, more bonuses, more distribution of accumulated surplus by big corporations.

Sixty - five thousand workers in textile and shoe industries learn that they are to have Christmas bonuses and better wages.

---

Two young female geniuses, Misses Fanny Hurst and Agnes Repplier, disagree about book writing. Agnes Repplier says it is "perilously easy"; Fanny Hurst says no, it is hard.

Publishers say all depends on the kind of books you write and the brain you have.

On to Success—

With It Comes Boldness in New Ideas; Our Sphere of Friends and Activities Expands

A POOR salesman may be a genius at gardening; an indifferent stenographer sometimes never suspects her own gift for cookery, for dress design, for ability to pick up foreign languages. By thinking candidly about yourself, by being as friendly to yourself as you would be to another, you can often draw up a picture of your tastes, abilities, desires and hopes which will astonish you.

Take an inventory of yourself, paying special attention to the things you like but which you have little of in your daily life. Then start putting them into it.

From Interest to a Specialty

Often we have to begin slowly—reading, or finding courses of instruction within our means, or working out a program for ourselves in solitude; but every day something can be done toward the new way of living. It can grow from an interest into a hobby, from a hobby into a side line, from a side line into a specialty. Then comes the day when the unsatisfactory work can be given up (to someone who will find it as satisfying and as absorbing as we find our own new field) and success is at last really and noticeably on its way to us—or we are on our way to it.

Vitalizes Character

Then living begins to be fun. We meet people with the same tastes, not just the chance acquaintances who come our way in an uncongenial profession. Having succeeded once, we begin to show a little daring; we try new ideas more boldly, and our world of friends and activities expands even more. Chances we couldn't even imagine until we got inside our real work turn up on every hand. Best of all, even a small success has a vitalizing effect on character.

That is the most interesting discovery that success brings in its train: those who are living successfully make the best friends. They are free from malice and spitefulness. They are not petty. They are full of good talk and humor.—Dorothea Brande in Cosmopolitan.

SHAMROCKS DOWN FAST KANAWHA QUINTET

Win Over.. Bulldogs By Large Margin

Seven Eagles Conference basketball fans got an eye opener at Kanawha Frday night when the Klemme High School Shamrocks completely outclassed Kanawha to win by a score of 34 to 12. The game was the outstanding feature of last week-end's program in the conference and was doped to be an air-tight battle, but Coach Kingery's basketeers completely ignored predictions to run up their second largest victory margin of the season

Buster Jorgenson was hitting with his spin shots Friday night, and accounted for five field goals before the evening was over to again lead the scoring. Schuldt played another whale of a game at guard and sneaked through the opposition for nine points of his own. Kaduce was a giant on both offense and defense, and Lemke, sarting his first game as a regular, looked like a veteran at his forward post. Keeper was master of ceremonies in the back court. He started nearly every play through Kanawha's defense and his floor work was outstanding. Grossheusch was the only other Shamrock to see action on the first team, but he gave the home team plenty to think about while he was in the fray.

Kanawha looked dangerous in the opening minutes of play and ran up a 5 to 0 lead before the Klemme boys struck their stride, but the Shamrock siege guns soon got working and Kanawha had to be content with two more points for the remainder of the half. The score at the intermission was 17 to 7.

The Little Shamrocks lost a hard-fought overtime battle to the Kanawha seconds by a score of 13 to 9. Grossheusch, Trampel, Paul, Abele, Lau and Kluckhohn all saw action in this game Grossheusch led the scoring with three field goals

CULL THE NON-LAYERS DURING DECEMBER OR EARLY JANUARY

Non-laying pullets take up valuable floor space and should be removed by culling, according to advice given byW M Vernon, poultry extensionist, Iowa State College The most favorable time for pullets to begin laying is during late September. October or November, and for this reason the pullet flock should be handled in December or early January to remove birds that have not started to lay.

"Slow maturing pullets are not profitable," Mr Vernon declares They may be detected by observing the appearance of the vent abdomen and head he states The non-producing pullet will have a small and dry vent, firm abdomen, small and pale comb and a pale face. Pullets of the yellow-skin breeds that have not started to lay will also have considerable yellow color in the vent, beak and shanks

COUNTY FARM PLANNNG WORK TO BE CONTINUED

Conservation and Good Land Use Will Be Stressed Duirng Coming Year

County argicultural planning work, introduced in the fall of 1935, will be continued in essentially its same form in 1937, Murl McDonald, assistant director of the Extension Service at Iowa State College, has announced. The project is conducted cooperatively by the Extension Service and the U. S department of Agriculture

The project is designed to aid in adapting the AAA program to local county conditions and in developing a long-time land use policy This year the program will give continued emphasis to adjustments needed locally in crop and livestock systems and farming practices to promote conservation and good land use. Last year county committees in general recommended a decrease in corn acerage, increased small grain acerage in some sections and an increase in legume hay and pasture crops.

Will Make State Summary

Organization of the project will be essentially the same as in 1936 County committees will consist of from 20 to 30 members who are representative of all agricultural interests, types of farming and farm organizations A state committee at the college will assist county committees with their work and make state summaries for use of the U S. Department of Agriculture

County committees will cooperate with various local groups in order that the committees report will represent the entire communities attitude toward a local land use program They also will study adjusments needed to make these land use practices possible The committees will be expected to follow up the 1936 project with community meetings, prepare reports and to assist generally in a constructive agricultural program with emphasis on long-time phases of agricultural planning

Conferences Scheduled

The tentative schedule for district conferences for setting up the 1937 project is: Jan 4th at Ames; Jan 5th at Denison and Cedar Rapids; Jan. 6th at Red Oak and Oelwein; Jan 7th at Chariton and Mason City; and Jan 8th at Fairfield and Spencer.

Two questions will be submitted to all county agricultural planning committes for consideration They are: What crop acerages shall represent final reccommendations of the committee under existing conditions? How will livestock enterprises be affected by the prevailing outlook and a trend toward reccommended crop acerages.

Three other questions, of which committees will be expected to select one for consideration are: What is the relation of soil conservation to production controll? What condition of farm tenure should be encouraged in the interests of conservation and better farm living? What practices can individual farmers employ to effect conservation?

Royal Neighbors Election

The Royal Neighbors met in the lodge rooms Friday afternoon and had an election of officers.

.. Oracle, Mrs. Sumner Trumbull; Past Oracle, Mrs J. N. Day; Vice Oracle, Mrs Henry Helps; Recorder, Mrs. George Lawhorn; Receiver, Mrs. C. G Waterman; Chancellor, Mrs. E. F. Jacobs; Marshall, Mrs. Martin Barz; Manager, Mrs. J. N. Day.

VENTURA UPSETS DOPE BUCKET

Shamrocks Drop Hard Fought Contest to Scrappy Ventura Five

The Klemme High School Shamrocks ran up against a scrappy and much-improved Ventura team Tuesday night and went down to their first defeat of the season by a count of 22 to 20. Ventura ran up a small lead at the start of the game and held it most of the way. A fierce rally on the part of the Shamrocks in the final minute of play netted them three field goals in quick succession, but the time was two short for the one more necessary goal.

Coyier at forward and Lineweaver at center did the principal damage for the winners. The latter playing his first game as a regular, performed in a manner that will make him a marked man in future Ventura games.

Jorgenson led the Klemme scoring with five field goals, and Kaduce and Keeper each got two. Failure of the Shamrocks to make good on any of their six free throws may have cost them the game Ventura made two out of six for their margin of victory.

The Little Shamrocks downed their opponents by a score of 13 to 10 in the first game of the evening. Grossheusch and Paul led the attack, each getting six points.

They Helped Make Christmas a Healthier (and Happier) Time for Their Fellow-Americans

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

IF CHRISTMAS this year is a healthier (and therefore a happier) time for many thousands of Americans—just how many there is no way of knowing—a part of the credit for that fact is due to two women. One of them was born on Christmas Day 115 years ago and the other was mainly responsible for giving her fellow-Americans a gayly-colored little "scrap of paper" which has become as much a symbol of Christmas time as holly wreaths, pine trees, red candles, carols, or even Santa Claus himself.

No doubt, you are familiar with the names of both Clara Barton and Emily P. Bissell, but you never happened to think of them in connection with the idea of a "healthy, happy Christmas." The purpose of this article is to show that connection.

On Christmas day, 1821, a baby girl was born in the farm home of Capt. Stephen Barton near North Oxford, Mass. Her parents gave her the name of Clarissa Harlowe, after the heroine of Samuel Richardson's Eighteenth century romance, but when she grew up, being a practical-minded young woman she dropped that romantic name and became known simply as Clara Barton.

If she had been a boy, perhaps she might have followed in the footsteps of her father, who had served in the Revolution under "Mad Anthony" Wayne, and joined the army. As it turned out, she was destined to go to war, even though she was a woman, but she went to alleviate pain and suffering, not to cause it.

Clara Barton was a sickly child but by engaging in vigorous outdoor exercise she changed herself into a robust young woman, a fact which was important to her later career. Even while engaged in teaching school (in 1854 she established at Bordentown, one of the first free public schools in New Jersey) she kept up her outdoor exercise. When she went to her New England home for summer vacations she worked in the garden and in the hay field. In winter she was a devotee of skating and other winter sports.

Service in the Civil War.

After a very successful career as a teacher Miss Barton went to Washington and served as a clerk in the patent office where she was working when the Civil war broke out. Then she determined to devote herself to the care of wounded soldiers on the battlefield and she was instrumental in organizing the sanitary commission which took charge of nursing sick and wounded soldiers in the field and in hospitals.

She served with the Army of the Potomac and in 1864 she was appointed "lady in charge" of the hospitals at the front of the Army of the James. In 1865 she went to Andersonville, Ga., to identify and mark the graves of Union prisoners buried there and in the same year President Lincoln placed her in charge of the search for missing men of the Union armies. As a result, her bureau of records traced out the fate of more than 30,000 "unknown soldiers."

During the years 1866-67 she lectured on her war experiences and afterward went to Switzerland for her health which had been seriously affected by her strenuous labors during the war. She was at Geneva when the Franco-Prussian war broke out and she assisted the grand duchess of Baden in the preparation of military hospitals. Also she became acquainted with the work of the Red Cross, the society of mercy which had been organized by Jean Henri Dunant, a Swiss, when she saw the horrors of war in northern Italy in 1859, and she gave unstinted aid to that society during the conflict of 1870-71.

SCENE IN AN ARMY HOSPITAL DURING THE CIVIL WAR

At the joint request of the German authorities and the Strasburg "Comite de Secours," she superintended the supplying of work to the poor of that city in 1871 and in 1872 had charge of the public distribution of supplies to the destitute people of Paris who had undergone the horrors of siege and the reign of the Commune. At the close of the war she was decorated with the golden cross of Baden and the iron cross of Germany.

Founding of the Red Cross.

Upon her return to this country in 1873 Miss Barton inaugurated a movement to secure recognition of the Red Cross society by the American government and finally, during the administration of President Arthur, saw her labors rewarded. Naturally she became the first president of the American Red Cross when it was organized in 1881.

Miss Barton's humanitarian labors did not end with the wars. During the eighties she was busy superintending the work of succoring the afflicted in the great fires which swept Michigan, in the floods on the Ohio and Mississippi rivers and at the great Johnstown flood in Pennsylvania. She served as president of the American Red Cross for 22 years and to the end of her days, which came in 1912, she was the living exponent of the spirit which has made the Red Cross "the greatest mother in the world."

As for the other woman who in years past (and this year) has contributed to making a "healthy, happy Christmas"—Miss Emily Bissell—she was a disciple of Clara Barton in the humanitarian work of the Red Cross. Back in 1907 she was secretary of the Red Cross in the state of Delaware and was trying to raise money for an open air pavilion to help in curing children in her state who were afflicted with tuberculosis.

Four years earlier a man named Einar Holboel, a postal clerk in the post office at Copenhagen, Denmark, had conceived the idea of selling special Christmas stamps and using the proceeds to build a hospital for tuberculous children in his country. His idea had been highly successful and one of his fellow-countrymen who had become an American, Jacob Riis, wrote an article about it for the Outlook magazine in the summer of 1907.

The Origin of the Idea.

One of those who read Riis's article was the secretary of the Delaware Red Cross, who wondered if Delaware couldn't issue a similar stamp in order to raise money for the pavilion which her state division of the Red Cross wished to build. For Miss Bissell to think was to act, so on December 9, 1907, two pretty girls in Red Cross uniforms took their place at a table in the post office in Wilmington, and began selling, for a quarter each, little pay envelopes labeled thus:

25 CHRISTMAS STAMPS
One Penny Apiece
Issued by the Delaware Red Cross, to stamp out the White Plague.

Put this stamp with message bright
On every Christmas letter,
Help the tuberculosis fight,
And make the New Year better.

These stamps do not carry any kind of mail, but any kind of mail will carry them.

The first day's sales were encouraging but Miss Bissell soon saw that they would not be able to sell enough of the seals to raise the required amount of money. So she made a trip to Philadelphia to enlist the aid of a newspaper there. It was the North American and its president and editor was E. A. Van Valkenburg, who had been the first to displease doctors by proposing publicity as the weapon to use against the white plague.

Van Valkenburg immediately saw what a great opportunity was offered by Miss Bissell's proposal. He placed at her command every facility of his newspaper to publicize the Christmas seal idea. As a result, the presses which were printing the seals in Wilmington couldn't turn them out fast enough to keep up with the demand in Philadelphia and the surrounding area, so a Philadelphia printer was enlisted.

Through its Washington correspondent, the newspaper got the postmaster general's permission to put up a booth in the Philadelphia post office lobby. Five days before Christmas the governor of Pennsylvania and the Pennsylvania branch of the national Red Cross indorsed the stamp. Four days before Christmas an editorial urged that "A Million Mercy Messengers" be bought by the people. Two days before Christmas "Happy New Year" was added to the stamp design, the demand having grown so. The day after Christmas more than half a million were distributed to city, state and nation.

Then came a flood of signed indorsements: from Washington; President Roosevelt, Secretary of State Root, Secretary of War Taft; from Baltimore, Cardinal Gibbons; from other places leaders in public life, philanthropy and education all featured on page one.

A Great Success.

On January 8, a check for $1,013.97 was sent to Miss Bissell, the proceeds of the North American's part in this preface to stamping out the plague—several times the sum Delawareans had wanted to raise and feared they could not get. And as much more from other sources in Pennsylvania. All told, Delaware and Pennsylvania raised $3,000 from this first sale of stamps.

As a result of this success, Miss Bissell was able to induce the authorities of the American Red Cross to undertake a nationwide sale of tuberculosis Christmas stamps in 1908. Influenced by her leadership, women's clubs, religious groups, various publications, as well as local Red Cross chapters gave their support to the sale. By such united and enthusiasic effort more than $135,000 was raised in the first national sale.

From 1907 to 1910, the National Tuberculosis association had been organizing a nationwide warfare against tuberculosis. Soon after the launching of this campaign came the establishment of open air schools for the care of delicate children, many of whom were known to have been exposed to tuberculosis. Other children who appeared anemic—run down, and in what was in those days believed to be a pre-tuberculosis condition, were also sent to these schools. The use of height-weight tables to determine the health status of children was very popular, and youngsters 10 per cent or more underweight according to the tables, were automatically dubbed pre-tuberculosis and listed as candidates for the open air schools. It was in 1908 that the first school of this type was opened in Providence, R. I., and it was not long before others were scattered all over the country.

These pioneers had the support of the foremost scientists, but very few funds for their work. To strengthen the organization's effort, the American Red Cross and the National Tuberculosis association joined forces to conduct the Christmas seal sale together.

The partnership between the American Red Cross and the National Tuberculosis association lasted 10 years. During that time the scarlet emblem of the American Red Cross appeared on the annual issues of Christmas seals. In 1919, however, the double-barred cross, international emblem of the anti-tuberculosis campaign and trade mark of the National. Tuberculosis association, was also embodied in the design of the seal. Since 1920, the seals have been "Tuberculosis Christmas seals."

* * *

The use of these seals has become an accepted part of the holiday celebration in this country—a veritable Christmas tradition. Since they came into existence through a chain of circumstances in which two women, serving humanity by their work in the Red Cross, played important parts, that is the reason for remembering Clara Barton and Emily Bissell at Christmas as two women who helped make it a healthier (and therefore a happier) time for their fellow-Americans.

To Store Food in Mines
President's Good Idea
No Criticism for Germany
Japan's Many Babies

While the President talks peace for all the Americas, England, locked in her small island, separated by narrow water from European hatred, realizes that it would be hard to keep out of a big war. She might, some day, move her imperial headquarters from London to Montreal or Quebec, as the French government once moved from Paris to Bordeaux, and the Spanish government recently from Madrid to Valencia.

Arthur Brisbane

England wonders what her people would eat if war should be forced upon her, with enemy submarines and airplanes sinking her food ships. She is not self-supporting, and her newly organized "food plans department" will try to store away enough food to last at least a year. As a "cache" for the food, England is using worked-out coal mines, of which many, going down thousands of feet, should be safe from bombardment.

---

The President's trip to South America proves to have been a most useful idea. Great crowds welcomed him in his brief stop at Rio de Janeiro, as he drove through the streets with the Brazilian President Getulio Vargas, bands playing "The Star-Spangled Banner."

The President will talk peace and business, at least as much business as peace, and he will make friends for us all in South America.

You may count that day rare on which Chancellor Hitler's government does nothing new and queer. Dramatic criticism and literary criticisms are now forbidden in Germany. Constructive criticism is of greatest value to actors and writers; the intelligent among them are grateful for it.

The Ruler of the universe was his own critic, "and God saw everything that He had made, and, behold, it was very good." All need criticism, the powerful need it more than others, and Hitler will have it when history is written. His minister of propaganda cannot control that.

Tokyo reports for Japan the world's highest birth rate; 2,180,703 new Japanese babies arrived in 1935, more than in 1934 by 148,931.

Japanese marriages are increasing, divorces decreasing; the latter down to less than one in 1,000 marriages. Japanese husbands and wives get along better than Americans do.

The great contract bridge competition ends and the Harold Vanderbilt cup goes to four players called the Kaplan team; Phil Abramsohn, Fred Kaplan, Harry Fishbein and Irving Epstein. Mr. Vanderbilt, on hand to present his cup, might telephone Chancellor Hitler that you do not have to be an "Aryan" to understand bridge.

---

Business is picking up and that includes marriage, most important. Chicago university says 750,000 fewer weddings have taken place during the six depression years than would have occurred in normal times. Hence the loss of about one million new American babies that would have been born. Seven hundred and fifty thousand young couples have missed, among them, more than three million years of marriage bliss.

The tide turned in 1935 with 1,327,000 marriages, highest total in our history.

Mr. Green's and Mr. Lewis' union labor organizations indicate that their differences may be settled, which is good news. Organized labor should present a united front against too-short pay and long hours.

The prosperity of the nation depends on how much the workers have to spend.

China says she will risk war with Japan rather than let Japan take more of her territory. If that war comes it will illustrate the difference between a country prepared, Japan, and one unprepared and disorganized, China.

Japan's unspoken answer to China's war threat is her birth rate. Those millions of new babies must go somewhere.

Sir Basil Zaharoff, called "mystery man" and "richest on earth," dead of heart disease at eighty-six, had for his motto, "Every man has his price." He dealt in munitions, and he may have bought, as well as helping to kill, many. Beginning poor, in Constantinople, Zaharoff climbed to the top in money and intrigue. It matters little where you start, what matters is inside the head.

Ideal Companionship

TRUE love must be built upon absolutely true friendship; there can be no other foundation for it. . . The man and the woman must have the all-powerful sense of ideal companionship between them. They must be able to say with truth to themselves that the world will always be richer to them together than apart. There may be many other elements in love but there can be no love at all without this element. — Harold Frederic.

Watch Your Kidneys!

Be Sure They Properly Cleanse the Blood

YOUR kidneys are constantly filtering waste matter from the blood stream. But kidneys sometimes lag in their work—do not act as nature intended—fail to remove impurities that poison the system when retained.

Then you may suffer nagging backache, dizziness, scanty or too frequent urination, getting up at night, puffiness under the eyes; feel nervous, miserable—all upset.

Don't delay? Use Doan's Pills. Doan's are especially for poorly functioning kidneys. They are recommended by grateful users the country over. Get them from any druggist.

These Cuddle Toys Solve Gift Problems

Pattern No 5609

"Eenie, Meenie, Minie, Mo"—it's hard to decide which to make—but why make just one, why not all! Delightful cuddle toys, these, and just the soft, warm playthings for a baby's arms. There's nothing to the making of them, for each is composed of but two pieces, with the exception of the bear, whose jacket is extra, and the chick, whose flapping wings are separate. Your gayest cotton scraps can go into the making of these winning gifts. In pattern 5609 you will find a transfer pattern for the four animals; instructions for making them; material requirements.

To obtain this pattern send 15 cents in stamps or coins (coins preferred) to The Sewing Circle Household Arts Dept., 259 West Fourteenth St., New York, N. Y.

Write plainly pattern number, your name and address.

Stunting Growth

Who are those men that measure futurity by the shadow of their own littleness? It is as if the loose stones lying about a foundation were to say, "You can build no higher than our heads."—Leigh Hunt.

Temptation

TO RESIST temptation once is not a sufficient proof of honesty. If a servant, indeed, were to resist the continued temptation of silver lying in a window when he is sure his master does not know how much there is of it, he would give strong proof of honesty. But this is a proof to which you have no right to put a man. There is a degree of temptation which will overcome any virtue. Now, in so far as you approach temptation to a man, you do him an injury; and, if he is overcome, you share his guilt.—Dr. Johnson.

Radio Robot Flies Eight Miles Aloft for Weather Data

Tiny Storage Battery Has Been Devised

Pasadena, Calif. — Scientists here as a step toward improved weather forecasting have made a robot balloon, which constantly calls down to earth radio reports of temperature, pressure and humidity from altitudes as lofty as 40,000 feet (nearly eight miles).

The flying radio station weighs only two pounds and the balloon is five feet in diameter. The radio emits a 1.7 meter wave, which is one of the shortest wave-lengths used for a practical purpose. The apparatus has already made one flight to 30,000 feet.

To reduce the weight of California Institute of Technology's soaring weather station, the smallest yet devised for such an ultra-short wave, Louvan E Wood, graduate assistant who designed the meteorograph, has developed a tiny two-volt storage battery that will rest on a fingernail. Weighing 4½ grams, this battery will be used in a series of about 50, replacing a dry cell battery system.

Broadcasts Humidity Records.

In addition to temperature and pressure, the station is designed to broadcast humidity records. The present method of gathering these data is by airplane Perfection of the radio system will provide a faster means of obtaining the data for forecasting purposes.

Except for the elimination of one or two technical difficulties in the recording of data, the radio method of gathering meteorological information aloft is on the eve of practical use.

By gathering weather data up to altitudes of 40,000 feet, meteorologists will be able to refine the new system of air-mass forecasting.

Tiny One-Tube Radio.

The radio, credit for which goes to Capt. O. C. Maier of the United States signal corps, has one tiny tube that transmits a constant signal, interrupted by a timing device that translates the data for broadcasting. This timing mechanism is a watch that has been refined, and develops one two-and-a-half-millionth horsepower, 25 times more than an ordinary watch.

Ultraviolet Ray Is Used in Selecting Eggs for Storage

Amsterdam —Eggs can be made to tell the truth about their age by exposing them to ultraviolet light, it has been discovered at the University of Utrecht.

The trick depends on the phenomenon known as fluorescence. Ultraviolet radiation is itself invisible to the human eye, but it causes various substances to shine with light of different colors.

To the human eye an egg is just an egg. But under a beam of ultraviolet a really fresh-laid egg glows with a very pronounced red coloration. Less freshly laid eggs shade into blue, and the older they are the deeper is the blue.

Classified by Ray.

Investigators at the University of Utrecht first made use of this new tool of the scientists to select eggs for storage.

A qantity of eggs were classified as to age by ultraviolet and then placed in storage. After six months not one of the "quite freshly laid" eggs had to be discarded. In another group identified by the ultraviolet light as "freshly laid," 1 per cent had to be thrown away when brought out for use at the end of the six months. In a third group of "not freshly laid" eggs, 8 per cent were discarded, and in a fourth group, recognized at the beginning as doubtful, 15 per cent had to be rejected.

Dream Book Is Relic From Ancient Egypt

London —A new and unique relic from ancient Egypt is a dream book used over 3,000 years ago to advise whether dreams were good or bad

The book, which archeologists call very remarkable, lists various things that an Egyptian was likely to dream of Each item is followed by the terse verdict: "good" or "bad"

The book is one of 18 papyrus manuscripts which the British Museum has just published.

Too Many Whalers on the Trail of Poor Leviathan

He Is Protected by Treaty of Powers

JONAH was never inside a whale at all and never meant to say he was, declares the latest bit of biblical interpretation. When the prophet related how he had been "swallowed up by a great fish," he was only using a figure of speech which his contemporary hearers understood well enough meant that he was in a pretty bad fix.

Nowadays the whale is in the position of Jonah. Too many whalers, with too efficient ships and too deadly killing weapons, are pursuing poor Leviathan through all the seven seas, and cluster thickest on his trail in the remotest part of the world, away "down under," in the waters about Antarctica A convention of 26 nations drew up a protective treaty at Geneva in 1931.

Among the ratifying powers are some that have no coastline at all, like Czechoslovakia and Switzerland, and others whose direct interest in the whaling industry is remote, like Turkey and Rumania. But the real masters of today's whaling, Norway and Britain, have ratified, and the United States, though now having only a 2 per cent stake in the total whaling interest, has signed up also.

Some Nations Won't Agree.

But there are a few notable holdouts: The U. S. S. R., which controls the greatest stretch of Arctic seacoast in the world, and Japan, always unwilling to yield any national advantage whatever. A newcomer is Germany, which is sending one of the great ships known as a floating factory into the field

If these holdout nations should plunge ahead without restraint, killing whales with no bag limit at all, they might be expected to undo all the good effects of other powers treaty-sealed self-denial. But the story is not quite so simple as that Those floating factories are terribly expensive things. Built in sizes running up to 20,000 tons or more, they cost a million dollars or so apiece. Each must be attended by from four to six smaller "killer" boats, which cost about $50,000 each, bringing the total for each unit up to something like $2,000,000. That is a lot of money to gamble on any kind of fishing.

Norway May Foil Them.

At present, Japan and Germany have only one floating factory each. And both nations are considered as "broke" as can be. It remains an open question whether they will spend great speculative sums on whaling fleets, when every mark and yen is urgently needed to feed other hungry spots in their respective national economies.

And Norway has a fistful of aces in the hole. A large part of the Norwegian fleet of floating factories is tied up at present. A special act of the Norwegian parliament forbids the selling of any of these ships. But if any holdout nations show signs of going whole hog, and junking the Geneva treaty, they will find themselves confronted with a fleet more formidable in this kind of a trade war than if it were composed of superdreadnaughts.

Early Palestine Favored Heads Bulging in Back

London.—The curious fashion of shaping one's head to make it bulge high at the back was known to early inhabitants of Palestine, so British archeologists digging at ruins of Lachish have discovered.

Several skulls, apparently pressed and bound to this shape in the pliant stage of childhood, have been unearthed. They are believed to date from an earlier time than the conquest of the Promised Land by the Israelites.

The odd-shaped skulls are pronounced by archeologists similar to the head of the famous Pharaoh of Egypt, Akhnaton, whose family had this peculiarity, though whether the Egyptian king's long head was naturally deformed or intentionally so has long been debated by scientists.

Plants' Food Making Slowed by Heavy Water

New York. — Heavy water, containing double-weight hydrogen atoms instead of the common, single-weight ones, slows down the food-making process in green plants, Drs. James Curry and Sam F. Trelease of Columbia university have found.

They kept colonies of a one-celled green plant in practically pure heavy water, and parallel colonies in similar amounts of ordinary water. The heavy water colonies carried on photosynthesis, or primary food production, only about two-fifths as rapidly as those in the common water.

Warm, Gay Jacket-Coats for Winter

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

AND now it is the "winter girl" that leads the grand march in the style parade In her giddily gay wool plaids, her Tyrolean-inspired knitted tags and her sturdy Norwegian worsteds and knits what a picture she makes midst scenes of snow and ice and gray burdened skys!

What with gorgeously colorful Scotch wool plaids almost stampeding the vogue and what with the Tyrolean influence going that strong all's needed is a range or so of snow-clad Alps in the distance to make the scene complete. It would seem as if the present sports and practical daytime fashions are about as picturesque as ever winter fashions might hope to be.

Important news in regard to clothes designed to fortify against the rigors of winter is the enthusiasm shown for fancy, sometimes quite fantastic, short jackets and hiplength coats also wool shirts (call 'em shortwaists if you insist) that contrast monotone skirts, culottes or plus four trousers—the latter a favorite type with the ski and skate devotee.

Let winds howl and icicles form in endless chain, it's immune you will be to their devastating chill if clad in a sturdy coat for all outdoors as shown to the left in the picture Here is a coat in the newer short length that performs a three-act-in-one of being gay, being "comfy" and high-style on every count. It is made of a rough-and-ready old-town wool plaid in warm deep color tones—just the sort of plaid weaves everybody's calling for this season.

Have you heard of the new plaid wool shirts that are showing up so vaingloriously in college-girl wardrobes? Not only are these plaid shirts rating ace-high in classroom and campus environs but for office and general everyday practical wear the shirt of enchanting plaid wool is everything it should be. See the perfectly tailored specimen of a modish plaid shirt in the illustration As here shown it is worn with dark green beautifully fitted men's wear flannel culottes.

The intriguing thing about the newer handknit fashions is that they are stylized to the 'nth degree and many interesting new and fanciful stitches are being introduced. A perfectly charming innovation is the employment of embroidery done in vivid Tyrolean color schemes in connection with not only knitted cardigans and sweaters but pert boxy hiplength jackets are made of felt or cloth trimmed with gay applique felt flowers and colorful bindings and amusing buttons.

That the newest style trends are being incorporated in hand-knitted fashions is a fact evidenced in the cunning waist-length jacket pictured on the figure seated. See the full-at-top sleeves that give the very important wide shoulder lines. If you are wanting to know, it requires about ten balls of feather-down yarn to knit this jacket which is done in a simple lacy pattern. One ball of Limerick green shetland floss trims it. Make this jacket Tyrolean, if you will, by embroidering gay little yarn flowers here and there. Bright colored buttons add yet another note of interest.

PETIT POINT BAGS

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

With the winter season of grandiose social functions coming on, visions of lovely evening bags begin to stir the imagination To women of discriminating taste a bag of exquisite petit point speaks most eloquently when it comes to giving the desired dramatization to the costume The very lovely and distinctive bags here pictured are creations by Madame Jolles of Vienna The sophisticated cape of regal black Lyon velvet shown at the top makes a perfect setting for the charming petit point bag done in brilliant colors and marvelously intricate design Below in the picture the subtle Edwardian mood of the patrician quilted satin coat is enhanced with a glamorous petit point bag of unusual shape and by a new handle, recalling a graceful arc. This winsome bag is as youthful as is the simply cut wrap that so unmistakably bears the stamp of aristocracy.

VELVET HAS PROVED SMARTEST MATERIAL

Velvet has proved to be the smartest material of the year. It is shown in numerous varieties — velveteen, panne, lame, shaved to a flat, stubby surface or printed into a striped or plaid design. Black, as is always the case in Paris, is the favorite, although various shades of green, red and brown are almost as popular.

The new velvets are used for severely tailored suits to be worn under fur capes as well as for dressy cocktail suits worn with rich lame blouses. Velveteen is used for street dresses worn under fur-trimmed cloth coats as well as jacket suits worn with plaid woolen blouses.

Right-Sized Heel Factor of Importance in Dress

To the woman who regards good dressing as an art, the right heel is as important as the right jewels or gloves.

If she aims to look tall and queenly in her evening gown, towering heels are an indispensable part of the picture. If her mood is coquettish and her gown inspired by an ancient Greek robe, heel-less or flat-heeled sandals provide the proper foot note.

Heels covered with vivid fabrics or encrusted with jewels add a sparkling touch to her formal evening ensembles. Many of her most striking costumes owe their success to the harmony between her heels and her hair ornament, handkerchief, or corsage As costume accessories heels are becoming more and more significant.

Lamb-Trimmed Tunics

Three importantly dressed women recently observed at Longchamp wore tunic wool costumes, with the silhouette marked by Persian lamb borders. One coat by Jodelle used also a wide border of the lamb for a bib-like front collar.

Household Questions

Lace curtains before being washed for the first time should be soaked for an hour or two in cold water to which two tablespoons of table salt have been added. This removes dressing from curtains and makes them much easier to launder.

Bake in a hot oven, allowing a quarter of an hour for every pound. When cooked the paste can be easily removed and it takes all the rind with it. A ham cooked in this way is delicious.

I noted in the official agenda, the program outline of the Buenos Aires conference, that no reference at all was made to the Monroe doctrine. Apparently, that course had ...o be followed. The Monroe doctrine is a ticklish matter among our neighbors to the south. Frankly, they do not like it.

No Boss Wanted

Considering all of the factors involved in the Monroe doctrine, there seems no conclusion ahead but eventual abandonment of that pronouncement. When I say that, I do not mean that the principles of the Monroe doctrine need be thrown into the ocean. Yet, the name has been the focal point around which much antagonism has been built up and the romantic Latin blood of South America can hardly be expected ever again to subscribe to the Monroe doctrine by that name.

What, then, is the course?

The Monroe doctrine, whether it was ever so intended, has placed the United States in a position where it is made to appear as a boss. No nation of people enjoys being bossed. So, if the Buenos Aires conference is to result in a definite understanding by which the peoples of the western hemisphere are welded together in an effective group, some understanding must be evolved which will replace the ill will engendered by the Monroe doctrine. Possibly, that understanding lies in the direction being followed by President Roosevelt. Apparently, he is willing to subordinate the Monroe doctrine and concede to those other peoples on behalf of the United States the end of our overlordship.

Undoubtedly, it will be a slow process. Present generations throughout the South American nations will be suspicious for a time and will move with caution but there are many who believe in eventual agreement among the western nations on a general policy that will keep us all out of European and Far Eastern entanglements to a greater extent than ever before.

The thing that may break down the apparent Roosevelt plan is the circumstance of drawn swords and cocked rifles in Europe at the moment. It is entirely possible that before concrete adhesion among the North and South American peoples can be accomplished, explosions in Europe may take place. If they do, propaganda agents of the conflicting powers will be abroad instanter. Attempts will be made to alienate various nations in the western hemisphere, to align them with one side or the other in the European controversy. It may well be that this condition will ruin the Roosevelt program before it gets under way but a start has been made and succeeding generations will profit if the peoples of North and South America can come to regard themselves as an individual group that is willing to make sacrifices necessary to cut off European connections when the European statesmen insist on fighting.

There is yet one more thought concerning the South American sessions. There are students of international affairs who already are saying that history has repeated itself and that the United States has lost, as usual, in its diplomatic dealings. They are saying that the revision of the Monroe doctrine and the rebirth of that policy under a new name represents a gift by the United States. It may well be that such has occurred. But among saner minds, I believe the conviction is that the Monroe doctrine already has undergone so many alterations and revisions that a major operation on its structure will clarify the picture. The Monroe doctrine was designed originally, of course, to prevent European nations from gaining a foothold in either of the Americas. That danger is definitely past. Why, then, is it necessary to perpetuate an antiquated policy that has no purpose any longer? Thus, it seems to me that if a revision, even a casting out of the Monroe doctrine can eliminate suspicion of our government's purposes among those peoples inhabiting the same hemisphere, it is not too much to pay.

There was a great banquet held at one of the hotels in Washington a few days ago. It is not unusual for great banquets to be held in the capital city but most of them are just banquets. The one to which I refer, however, had a significance that is quite unusual. It commemorated the establishment of the United States patent office and celebrated its one hundredth birthday.

Birthday Observed

Something like eleven hundred inventors, research scientists, representatives of industry and patent office officials entered the great dining room by candlelight. Then, the toastmaster waved a wand over one of the greatest inventions of modern times and the room was bathed in an electric brilliance the like of which has never been seen. The action typified, told the story of, scientific development in the United States and elsewhere.

Best Pork From Conditioned Hog

Animals Should Weigh From 200 to 250 Lbs., to Make the Best Meat.

By H. W. Taylor, Extension Swine Specialist, North Carolina State College
WNU Service.

Getting hogs in good condition for slaughtering is one of the main points in successful butchering. The best pork comes from hogs that are neither too young nor too old, too fat or too thin.

Butcher hogs should be well finished. A well finished hog weighing from 200 to 250 pounds produces the most satisfactory pork for curing on the farm.

Smooth, evenly fleshed animals produce a better meat, and will cut up with less waste than coarse, rough, wrinkled, and flabby ones. They also are more tender, finer textured, with the right proportion of fat and lean.

Hogs that are gaining in weight are usually the healthiest and will make the best meat. However, the loss of a few pounds in shipping before butchering will not lower the quality of the meat.

The muscles of a thin hog are tough. They lack the flavor and juiciness found in a well marbled piece of meat.

Extremely fat, heavy hogs cannot be converted into the best quality cured pork.

Although hogs may be slaughtered at any age, meat from young pigs is watery and soft and does not have the flavor and keeping qualities of meat from animals a little older.

Prevention of Horns on Young Calves Explained

In response to frequent requests, a county agent, in the Pacific Rural Press, gives the following directions for prevention of horns on young calves:

When the calf reaches the age from three to five days, clip away the hair from around the horn buttons to expose the spot where the horns will normally develop. Take a stick of caustic soda or caustic potash and wrap one end with a piece of paper to prevent the danger of burning your fingers. Moisten the uncovered end of the caustic stick but do not wet it so it will run. Apply the wet end of the caustic stick to the horn buttons, first on one, then on the other, repeating this two or three times until you are sure all of the horn button has been thoroughly covered with the caustic material. The caustic should be allowed to dry after each application. Under no condition permit the caustic to touch other than the horn buttons. After completing the work keep the calf away from moisture that might reach the horn buttons and cause the caustic to run down over the face.

Alfalfa in Pig Ration

Alfalfa is sometimes added to the pig ration to add minerals and vitamins, which are especially valuable in the sow ration. For growing pigs, states a writer in the Montreal Herald, alfalfa should not be used as pigs cannot digest any appreciable amounts of dry roughage. Their digestive systems are not adapted to such feed, either to digest it or to hold enough of it to make it a satisfactory source of nutrients especially if rapid growth is to be obtained. Brood sows are a different problem. They are large, but not growing, and hence can often profit by having their rations made more bulky.

Oats, Barley for Calves

In general oats are preferable to barley for growing calves if one must be fed to the exclusion of the other. If both grains are on hand use a mixture of the two with oats constituting at least ½ the combination. The addition of barley to the oats, especially if the latter happen to be of poor quality, will materially increase the feeding value. Barley should not be fed as the sole grain if it can be arranged to include some other grain with the barley.—Montreal Herald.

Shattered Shrines

Vain search is still being made by the Belgian police for the people who blew up the sacred oak tree at Gembloux, near Namur. This oak was a thousand years old, and is said to have been planted by Saint Guibert in the year 900.

This is not the first outrage of the kind. In Washington County, Pennsylvania, stood one of the greatest curiosities in America. This was the so-called "Painted Rock," a stone altar of enormous age on which were carved figures of men and animals, including the kangaroo, a creature unknown in the New World. Hundreds of learned men had visited the spot to study the carvings and inscriptions.

On a night in July, 1906, a violent explosion shook the neighborhood and in the morning the rock was found to have been blown to fragments.—Pearson's Weekly.

Holiday Time Chosen For Beautiful Church Wedding

JEANNE THADA IS BRIDE OF KANAWHA YOUNG MAN

Reformed Church Is Scene Of A Beautiful Marriage Ceremony

The Klemme Reformed Church was the scene of a beautiful and impressive wedding ceremony on Sunday evening, December 27th. The church auditorium and balcony were filled to capacity with relatives and friends who came for the candle-light ceremony in which Miss Jeanne Thada, only child of Mr and Mrs. Walter Thada, of Klemme, was united in marriage to Mr. Edward J. Thompson, son of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas H. Thompson, of Kanawha.

The ceremony began at 8:00 o'. clock, and after the ushers had seated the invited guests, Mr. Don Brummond of Kanawha escorted Mrs. Thada, mother of the bride, to to her place of honor near the front of the church. Miss La Vonne Sherwood then sang two numbers, "Oh, Promise Me," and "I Love You Truly." She was accompanied on the piano by Miss Marie Stille.

Rev. Grosshuesch, the groom and his best man, Orville Faber, of Kanawha, entered the auditorium from a side room and took their places at the altar. As Miss Stille played Lohrengrin's "Wedding March" the ushers, Don Brummond and James Veldhouse came down the aisle, followed by the matron of honor Miss Irene Harms of Eldora, and the bridesmaids Miss Margaret Gates, of Clear Lake, and Miss Helen Thompson, sister of the groom. They were followed by the bride on the arm of her father, who gave her in marriage at the altar Rev. Calvin Grosshuesch then spoke the ritual that united the young couple, using the single ring ceremony.

The bride was attired in a long white satin gown, with train, satin slippers in white, and wore a waist length tulle veil,made cape style and trimmed with orange blossoms. She carried a shower bouquet of white roses.

The matron of honor and the bridesmaids were all attired in floor length dresses of white crepe and wore white turbans. Each carried a bouquet of carnations.

The groom, best man and ushers wore dark suits.

The auditorium and altar were beautifully decorated, the color scheme being white and green.

Seventeen tall candlebras, each with five white candle tapers provided a soft light. A high bank of evergreens was placed at the rear of the altar, and at each side a basket of chrysanthemums.

After the ceremony the bridal party left the church to the strains of Mendelssohn's Wedding March, and the guests were dismissed by Stanley Thada and Thos. Thompson.

Reception Held At The Thada Home

After the church wedding a reception was held at the Thada home, which was attended by fifty one relatives and friends.

The bride's table was decorated with chrysanthemums, carnations and ferns, and a four tier wedding cake, topped with a minature bride and groom, being used as a center piece.

Waitresses were Delores Thada, Bernice Thada cousins of the bride and Vera Golberg. Miss Quandt played the piano during the reception.

The bride and groom received congratulations as they stood under a decorated arch near a large window.

Mrs. Thompson was born at Mason City, and has lived at Thornton, Goodell and Klemme. She is a graduate of the Klemme High School and attended Coe College at Cedar Rapids.

Mr. Thompson, after graduating from the Kanawha high school, attended college and graduated at Iowa State Teachers College at Cedar Falls.

After the reception Mr. and Mrs. Thompson left for Des Moines where he is employedby the Register and Tribune.

Many Guests Present

KLEMME—GOODELL TO PLAY ON GARNER FLOOR

Lack of Seating Room in Klemme Gymnasium

Klemme basketball fans should take special notice that the arrangements have been made with Garner High Shcool to have the Goodell game played on the Garner floor. This game, the biggest attraction of the basketball season, was originally scheduled to be played on the Klemme floor January 15th. It will be played at Garner on that same date.

The gymnasium at Garner will accomodate as many fans as care to see the game. Local school officials and interested townspeople felt that this was the only way that everyone could hope to see the game.

Goodell and Klemme have each lost only one game to date. In other games both teams have been piling up big scores. The game at Garner should truly be the "battle of the century."

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted
by William Bruckart

Washington — Senator O'Mahoney of Wyoming has prepared a bill for introduction early in the new congress that will set up, if it becomes law, a comprehensive mechanism to control and regulate some of the principal activities of business corporations. It is a far reaching proposition, as it now stands, and it cannot be passed off lightly. There is support for it in a number of quarters. While it undoubtedly will not become law in its present form, it must be regarded as the opening wedge.

To Control Business

The Wyoming senator's principal idea is to require businesses of an incorporated character to take out a federal license. If they do not comply, the proposed law would deny them the right to ship goods into retail trade between states.

While the main theme of the proposition does not seem anything about which one should get excited, it is the things that can be done behind such a general requirement that must and will be examined by congress and the country before it takes a step of the kind advocated by Senator O'Mahoney. For example, if the federal government is permitted to require businesses to obtain a license or charter from Washington, those businesses may be compelled to meet all manner of requirements before such a license or charter is granted. In the reverse, if after they have the license, they fail to observe the provisions laid down either by congress or bald - headed bureaucrats, revocation of the license is the penalty that may be exacted. It should be added that exaction of a penalty of this kind, once the license provision is established as a federal government right, becomes a powerful weapon and the limit to which that power may be exercised is scarcely to be forecast.

While, as I said, the O'Mahoney legislation may not be expected to become law in its present form, its terms and provisions give a hint of what can be expected of any legislation of a similar character.

Take this provision, for example:

"Rates of pay shall be increased and hours of work shall be reduced in accordance with gains in the productive efficiency of the industry, arising from increased mechanization, improvements in technological methods, or from other causes, to the end that employees shall have an equitable participation in the output of industry, and that employment and mass purchasing power may keep pace with industry."

It seems quite obvious that under such a basic statement of principles, a business could easily be made to agree to collective bargaining among its employees, to establish minimum wages and to follow the dictates of some bureau or commission in Washington in actual management and promulgation of policies. Indeed, it is set forth in the O'Mahoney draft that the federal trade commission would be authorized to obtain all "relevant and detailed data as to production costs, prices and profits."

Dictatorial Powers

As I see this sort of thing and from the views of experts with whom I have consulted, I cannot escape the conclusion that such legislation simply extends to the federal government dictatorial powers over virtually all private business.

It means, moreover, that politics and politicians would be the guiding force and that if union labor leaders were in control of the agency having supervisory powers over business or if communists or conservatives or any other class were in control, business would be directed in accordance with the economic views of that school of thought. Since our nation frequently hands the responsibility of government control from one political party to the other, the implications of such legislation as this are tremendous, to say the least.

Constitutional questions enter into this legislation and it may be that the basic theory advanced by the Wyoming senator will not hold at all. As I understand it, Senator O'Mahoney is holding no pride of authorship as to the language of his bill but to the principles he strongly adheres. So, it is made to appear at least, as I said above, that this proposal constitutes an entering wedge on an entirely new theory of government's relation to private business. For that reason, it is one of the most significant propositions to come forward in recent years, more significant, I believe, than the ill-fated NRA. It certainly is a proposition that should be watched closely by all citizens.

Affairs of the heart are all right privately, our American Department of State holds, but it reserves the right to horn into any love affair that involves an American foreign service officer. It is all perfectly open and above board. The Department of State has put its conclusions into writing, into an official regulation, and hereafter no foreign service officer can marry an alien while he is in the foreign service unless he gets the consent of "father" State department.

Mixing in Love Affairs

It is immensely interesting but not significant in an international way that the State department's order concerning international marriages should have been promulgated during the heat of the British constitutional crisis over King Edward's determination to marry the American - born Wallis Warfield Simpson. It simply happened to come along at the same time, but since all the world loves a lover, in Washington one hears reference to the Simpson-Edward affair mentioned many times in the same breath with the State department decree. This obtains because nearly all of our foreign service people have relations or friends in the national capital and the decree forbidding international marriages set many tongues to wagging.

But the State department ruling ought to be treated with utmost seriousness and sincerity. It is important. It is necessary to stretch the imagination a great way in order to assume that international marriages of the type banned by the State department would "shake an empire" after the manner of international marriages among royalty. On the other hand, it seems to me to be quite fair to say that international marriages among official representatives of a nation can very easily prove embarrassing to the government by which the foreign service officer receives credentials. In fact, there are instances on record where such marriages have proved to be serious obstacles in the settlement of disputes between governments.

Then, it must be considered that there is a genuine possibility of war in Europe in the next few years. A tremendous tragedy is being prepared there. While obviously any governmental decision that has the effect of keeping lovers apart arouses antagonism, a sympathetic feeling among all with tender hearts, in this circumstance, the rule seems well justified. In addition to following the lead of other nations on the point, our State department has banned these international marriages largely in order to keep our nation free from any possible entanglements in event of that European tragedy that looms like red fire on the horizon of the future. Marriages heretofore contracted, of course, will not be disturbed by the new ban, but elimination of that source of potential difficulty for the future is regarded as likely to be valuable.

I have heard criticism of the State department's order on the ground that affairs of the heart are private affairs—which indeed they are. But it must be remembered that where an individual accepts the rights, prerogatives and privileges of official position, he accepts at the same time certain definite responsibilities. In the case of a foreign service officer, his acceptance of the government title makes him at once and the same time a part of that government in a most peculiar way. Because foreigners do not understand our government any better than we understand foreign governments, when an American foreign service officer speaks, he speaks actually as the American government. One need not amplify this further than to say, therefore, one of that official's responsibilities is to carry out policy. National policy can be arranged only at its proper sources, namely, the President and the Department of State.

So, while budding romances may be blighted, heartaches may arise, soft lights in the eyes of men and maidens may be dimmed by the cruel and cold words of official regulations, it needs must be said that the welfare of a great nation must supersede the personal desires of a lonely man for a mate.

Thus, where any of our American diplomats or consular officers hereafter feel they cannot tread life's highway without the accompaniment of a foreign-born princess of their dreams, they simply will have to resign from their jobs and bring the lady home.

The greatest of modern tenors, Caruso, was a bricklayer in his younger days. He was the 18th son of his parents. Every one of the first 17 children died in infancy. Caruso joined the Metropolitan Opera in 1903 and during the next 17 years sang over 607 times, for which he was paid over a million and a half dollars or an average rate of $2,785 a performance. Offered $4,000 a night at one time, he protested that $2,500 would be quite enough. Caruso refused to sing in his home town—Naples—because he was once hissed there. One of his favorite stunts was that of breaking glasses by singing to them, his voice, at a certain note, causing a vibration that glass could not withstand.—New Biography.

Rid Yourself of Kidney Poisons

DO you suffer burning, scanty or too frequent urination; backache, headache, dizziness, loss of energy, leg pains, swellings and puffiness under the eyes? Are you tired, nervous—feel all unstrung and don't know what is wrong?

Then give some thought to your kidneys. Be sure they function properly for functional kidney disorder permits excess waste to stay in the blood, and to poison and upset the whole system.

Use Doan's Pills. Doan's are for the kidneys only. They are recommended the world over. You can get the genuine, time-tested Doan's at any drug store.

Picturesque Sydney

Archibald Memorial Fountain, Sydney

Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.

A MAGNIFICENT panorama is Sydney, capital city of New South Wales, Australia. Trade cubes and tall apartments crown the ridges overlooking the bay There are no Manhattan-like cloud piercers, however, for Sydney has limited her skyward growth to 150 feet, yet position gives impressiveness. Homes sprawl over promontories and spill down the hillsides to the water's edge—a harbor-girdling band of red-tiled roofs and flowering gardens.

And the harbor! "Our harbor" Sydneysiders proudly call it, although on maps it appears under the prosaic name that Captain Cook gave it—Port Jackson. Its multiple arms and innumerable bays and coves loop and snuggle among the hills—intimate, lovely, utilitarian.

From an airplane cockpit this water maze is even more striking than from steamer deck. Its compass is 22 square miles, but so irhave to walk or sail nearly 200 have to walk or sailnnearly 200 miles to go arond its shores. No other harbor is more mingled with the city to provide play space and a haven for the world's rich argosies.

Sleek ocean steamers, rusty freighters, crowded double-decked ferries, speedboats, fussy tugs, and trim, billowly-sailed yachts carve frothy white paths on its ultramarine surface. Commerce also throbs beside several of the bays at engineering works, dockyards, wheat silos, ship-coaling yards, and some 14 miles of wharfage space.

Harbor Bridge Is Colossal

Like a rainbow over the port is the mighty arch of Sydney Harbor bridge At the time it was opened to traffic, in 1932, forty million fares annually were being collected on cross-harbor ferries.

A constant stream of motor, train, tram, and pedestrian traffic now crosses the 160-foot-wide roadway hanging high in the air from the 1,650-foot span, which at its highest point loops 440 feet above water level.

Of momentary note in this swiftly changing age of the world's "greatest" engineering triumphs is the fact that Sydney Harbor bridge is the longest and widest arch-suspension-type structure that man has yet attempted.

Oceanic steamers tie up at Circular quay in the shadow of this colossus of steel and stone. The genesis of trim Circular quay was Sydney Cove, where the city was born in January, 1788.

The American Revolution, only a few years before, had denied to England a place for her "undesirable" subjects. So to this nook, in "the finest harbour in the world in which a thousand sail in line might ride in most perfect security," came Capt. Arthur Phillip of the English navy when Captain Cook's much publicized Botany bay had been found unsuitable for habitation. His little fleet of 11 ships bore 778 prisoners, together with officers and marine guards.

It should be recalled that "convicts" of that period included many minor offenders and those who fell into political disfavor.

Beginning of the City

Here Captain Phillip became governor and superintended the carving out of a small settlement beside a "stream which stole silently through a very thick wood." Would that he might stand at the water front today and look up the commercial canyons and at the ships moving in and out of port!

Much more would be the awe of some of the less visionary officers who wrote reports back to the homeland, stating that the colony couldn't even be self-supporting in a hundred years! Here is a city where the goodly governor and the officers now may issue dinner invitations without the request, "Bring your own bread!"

Phillip himself visualized his settlement developing with streets 200 feet wide but his ideas were ignored and the city expanded without any definite plan.

Other governors came and went, contributing little or much to Sydney. Notable among them was Governor Macquarie, the "building governor," who held the reins from 1809 to 1822.

Assisting him in his comprehensive building scheme was Francis Howard Greenway, a convict, who became the official architect with the munificent salary of three shillings a day. Greenway's labors endured, as attested by St. James' church, the Conservatorium of Music (designed as Government House stables), and other structures still doing service.

One commissioner from England, however, complained that the 75-cents-a-day architect was making "too great a sacrifice of time and labour to the purpose of ornament and effect!"

In 1851 came a gold strike in New South Wales. A rush was on. From all over the world arrived seekers after fortunes, as in the California rush of '49. As in our West, many of the diggers later became settlers. More men, more wealth, and more trade boomed Australia. So, too, did Sydney grow.

A City in Transition

Today old buildings are being demolished to make way for new; riveters beat a tattoo on gaunt steel skeletons of tomorrow's new shops and offices; a pathway is being mowed through two blocks to extend another thoroughfare.

It is a city in transition. Sleek modern buildings of concrete and polished stone surround but do not engulf a Renaissance town hall, a Byzantine market, fine Gothic churches, a Tudor castle government house, and an Ionic art gallery. The florid art Victorian appearance, however, is rapidly disappearing.

Neon lights proclaim night clubs, theaters, and motion-picture "palaces." Last year Sydney played to crowded houses its first all-Australian musical comedy.

American institutions have touched the city. Milk bars, or soda fountains, fruit-juice stalls, and light-lunch restaurants have become popular. But a drug store is still a "chemist shop," where only drugs are dispensed, and one buys cigarettes from a tobacconist.

One large department store has devoted extensive floor space to a restaurant, where more than 6,000 luncheons are served every business day, besides providing special cafeterias and dining rooms for its 4,000 employes. Throughout the suburban districts, gasoline stations (petrol pumps) have sprung up. One even rejoices in the name of "Ye Auto Drive Inn."

Sydney's streets in the down-town business section are becoming painfully cramped for the heavy traffic that surges through them.

Great Wool Sales

The Royal Exchange is the largest wool selling center in the world, having displaced London, which held that position for many years. More than a million bales of the golden fleece are auctioned off every year. In addition, there are salesrooms for tallow, hides, sheepskins, and other pastoral products.

A wool sale is a fascinating thing to watch. Foreign buyers, Australian milling groups, and local wool scourers fill the amphitheater on each sale day. Catalogues are provided, in which are numbered and classified the different lots to be sold. The wool is previously put on display for inspection at local brokers' show stores, so that the selling is done only by number.

At the auctioneer's call for bids two dozen men may jump to their feet, barking figures and signaling with their hands.

On Saturday afternoons the harbor and Sydney's flying squadron attract doctor, lawyer, business executive, bus driver, dock hand, and shop clerk.

Some devotees are in sweaters and shorts, hauling at sails; others are in flannels, watching from the decks of trim motor craft; hundreds line the rails of special ferries that follow the race; the mid-harbor islands and foreshores along the course are vantage points for still others.

Like a flock of white winging gulls, the competing craft tack and skim over the water. With all canvas piled on in a fresh nor'easter, it is a beautiful sight.

During the long summer season thousands of the city's sun worshipers resort to the beaches and swimming pools Nature has provided Australia with 11,000 miles of coastline, along which are innumerable golden-sanded beaches. Around the harbor and along Pacific-laved coast in the immediate vicinity of Sydney there are twenty beaches to choose from.

At two of these beaches, Bondi and Bronte, 19,000,000 annually — counting repeaters—go to "shoot the breakers" and frolic on the dazzling sands. A hardy, bronzed lot they are, these brilliantly suited children of the sun.

"Fingerprints" of Metals Used to Forecast Failure

X-Ray Test Will Show the "Laue Pattern"

Cleveland, Ohio.—How science is studying the X-ray "fingerprints" of metals in the hope of being able to forecast the failure of airplane propellers and other metal structures was described at a meeting of the American Society of Metals here by Dr. Charles S. Barrett of the department of metallurgy of Carnegie Institute of Technology, Pittsburgh, Pa.

Within some limits, explained Dr. Barrett, it is now possible to examine by X-rays a piece of metal suspected of fatigue and possible impending failure, and obtain some idea of the internal damage which has already occurred in it.

How the Test Works.

A specimen piece of metal from an airplane propeller (for example) is placed in front of an X-ray tube and the piercing X-radiation passed through it. The little metal crystals bend the X-rays into a design named the Laue pattern after their famous European discoverer. The pattern, characteristic for each metal, looks like rings of tiny spots arranged in circles with somewhat the appearance of tree rings.

Fresh new metal, which has never been stressed in actual use, shows one kind of Laue X-ray pattern and a similar piece of the metal, except that it has been in use, will show a slightly different pattern.

This change in the X-ray "fingerprints" of metals with age is quite different from what happens to human fingerprints. From infancy to old age the pattern of fingerprints remains unchanged and this is the basis of their use in identification and police work.

Comparison Is Necessary.

Where it is possible to have test samples of metal in the laboratory and have on record an X-ray pattern for varying lengths of metal life and fatigue, the state of another piece of metal can roughly be compared, said Dr. Barrett.

In theory at least, if a piece of metal broke after 2,000,000 flexings with a load of 29,000 pounds to the square inch, and showed a characteristic pattern, it would be possible to tell roughly how near another piece of similar metal—used in an airplane propeller—might be to fracture and failure.

Fossil Insects of Dinosaur Age Are Found in Amber

Cambridge, Mass. — Fossil insects of the Cretaceous, the twilight age of the dinosaurs, have been collected in northern Canada by methods reminiscent of gold rush days in the Yukon, by Profs. Charles T. Brues and F. M. Carpenter of Harvard university.

The insects are embedded in lumps of amber and are the first of this age to be found, as the Baltic amber of Europe is of more recent Tertiary origin. Millions of years ago, when the amber was oozing pitch on the trunks of conifer trees, they got stuck and embedded. Then the gummy stuff was buried, and slowly hardened to amber, giving its victims a truly royal entombment.

Professor Brues led a small party far into northern Manitoba. They pitched camp on the shores of an isolated lake, where amber was known to occur.

Instead of a continuous shore of sand, mud or rock, this lake beach is formed of ground-up wood. The battered debris from logs and trees washed into the lake by the Saskatchewan river forms this unusual shoreline material. In this the small lumps of amber are included.

"Panned" the Fossils.

Dr. Brues and his party shoveled this wooden "sand" into pans, and washed it in a stream in the approved gold-panning ritual. The heavy amber settled to the bottom, and the lighter wood fragments were washed over the edge. In this way the party accumulated a quantity of amber bits weighing altogether about 400 pounds.

They have not yet had time, since returning to the laboratory, to give this amber treasure more than a swift preliminary looking over. Detailed examination will require many months of work.

Change in Matter Is Continuous, Say Scientists

Heraclitus' Theory Contained Truth

IN ANCIENT Greece, a philosopher named Heraclitus concluded that all matter was ultimately composed of fire. On looking about him he noticed that nothing in the material world seemed to "stay put." Everything was in a state of flux. And, since the crackling flames of burning wood seemed to change more often than anything else he knew of he decided that fire was at the bottom of it all.

Now, while modern science does not agree with Heraclitus' theory as to what matter is made of, it does agree with him concerning the omnipresence of change. It has, in fact, gone much farther than Heraclitus ever could in studying the occurrence of very slow changes of which the average man never dreams.

A piece of gold, for instance, is one of those things which we feel sure will remain as it was when we last saw it. And so it will, practically speaking. But according to recent experiments at Kaiser Wilhelm institute by W. Seith and E. A. Peretti, solid metals can flow right into one another.

Gases Seep Through Metals.

Gases also may seep slowly through solid metals, it has been found by C. J. Smithells and C. E. Ranslet of the British General Electric company. Strictly speaking, it is impossible to confine nitrogen forever in an iron tank. The nitrogen atoms are continuously worming their way between the iron atoms of which the confining walls are built.

The eternal motion with which all atoms are endowed is the cause of all such kinds of diffusion. And this motion is identified by scientists with heat. So, in a very vague and incomplete sense, Heraclitus' intuition may be said to contain a grain of truth.

Cosmic Rays Take Part.

Cosmic rays, too, have a share in the incessant change about us. Not even the rock of Gibraltar escapes from the disintegrating action of this bombardment from distant stars and galaxies.

But why bother with such slow changes which may require aeons before their effect is noticeable? The answer to this question involves the raison d'etre of all pure science. Paradoxically, enough, the goal of the study of changes is the discovery of those things which are permanent—the laws of nature.

Butterfly's "Trunk" Is Explained by Delaware Scientist

Newark, Del.—Butterflies and moths uncoil their long probosces, or "trunks," on very much the same principle as that used in the toy paper "snakes" that startlingly dart into your face at carnivals or parties, blown out of a tight coil by the breath of some fellow-reveller.

This simple mechanical explanation of one of biology's most difficult riddles has been discovered by Dr. J. B. Schmitt of the University of Delaware.

In Two Sections.

A butterfly's proboscis is not a simple tube or pipe. It is made of two trough-shaped sections, held together at the edges, so that it "adds up" as a tube through which the insect can suck up flower juices.

In each half, beneath the trough, there is a tube, closed at the outer tip, but communicating with the head-cavity at its base. Each of these tubes is filled with blood. Normally, the proboscis is kept coiled by the pull of many short muscles, arranged diagonally. But when the insect is ready to feed, a valve closes at the base of each tube, preventing the blood from flowing back into the head. At the same time, certain muscles squeeze down on the base of the tube, like a hand on a rubber bulb. This puts pressure on the fluid, which has nowhere to go but out, so that it pushes out into the tube and straightens it out.

Porous Tiles Made With Gas-Forming Substance

Zurich, Switzerland. — A new type of porous construction block or tile is going into production here. It is made by a method like that used for cement, except that gas-forming substances are added to the water.

An important feature of the process is that the specific gravity of the resulting material and the size of the cells can be regulated at will through the quantity of the gas-forming material. Thus it is possible to make extremely light building tiles having a specific gravity only half that of dry wood.

Showing Three New Styles

YOU who sew-your-own will be more enthusiastic than ever after making realities of these three new styles. Each is truly a delightful fashion and best of all there's something for every size in the family—from the "little bear" right on up.

Pattern 1997 is the smartly styled smock that probably has an option on a little portion of your heart right now. Fair enough, follow the dictates of your heart and you can't go wrong. This little wardrobe nicety will serve you becomingly and well. It will add to your comfort too. Make it of broadcloth, gingham, sateen or chintz for prettiness and easy maintenance. There is a choice of long or short sleeves and the shiny gold buttons offer just the sort of spicy contrast one likes in informal apparel. Available for sizes 32, 34, 36, 38, 40, 42 and 44. Size 34 requires 3½ yards of 39 inch material.

Pattern 1204—This new day frock for sizes 36 to 52 is the final word in style and charm in any woman's language. To don this flattering fashion is to step blithely into the realm of high fashion. The soft feminine collar is most becoming and it serves as an excellent medium for contrast. The sleeve length is optional. Slender lines are the main feature of the skirt and a very pleasant effect results from the wide and handsome flare. Satin or sheer wool would most assuredly win your friends' approval and perhaps just a little of their envy. This pattern is designed for sizes 36, 38, 40, 42, 44, 46, 48, 50 and 52. Size 38 requires 4⅜ yards of 39 inch material. Less with short sleeves. The collar in contrast requires ⅞ yard.

The adorable little number for Miss Two-To-Eight, Pattern 1994, is surely without competition in the way of downright intrigue. It's the essence of youthfulness with a lot of grown-up technique added to make it a crackajack. Why not do things up right and cut this model twice—panties too, naturally—using sheer wool for the "best" occasion frock and gingham or seersucker for school, play and all-purpose use? Pattern 1994 is available in sizes 2, 4, 6 and 8 years. Size 4 requires 2½ yards of 39 inch material plus ¾ yard of bias binding for trimming.

New Year's Day in the Nation's Capital

A typical scene in the days when Mr. and Mrs. American Citizen called at the White House for the annual New Year's Day reception.

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

NOWHERE else in the United States is New Year's day celebrated more in accordance with long-standing tradition than in the nation's capital. Time was when the people of virtually every American city observed the custom of "keeping open house" on January 1 and "paying New Year's calls." But modern days (and especially the "whoopee era") changed all that. After a riotous New Year's Eve celebration, the average celebrant didn't feel much like making the rounds for formal calls the next day. So this custom, like so many others of the so-called "good old days," gradually went into the discard.

However, in Washington, where precedent is a fetish and tradition a vital force in everyday life, this custom has survived longer. It has been modified somewhat, of course, but among some Washingtonians, especially the "Cliff Dwellers" (old residents) it has been kept alive in much the same form as in the past.

Perhaps one reason why it has been so little changed is that the annual New Year's Day reception at the White House has served as a model for other "open houses." Established as a symbol of the fact that there is no barrier between the sovereign people and their elected leaders, this custom of throwing open the doors of the Executive Mansion to the public on New Year's Day was observed by almost every President from Washington down to Hoover. By that time it became apparent that, praiseworthy though its intent might be, this reception, which imposed upon the President the ordeal of shaking hands with thousands of people within a few hours, was too great a strain upon the Chief Executive and when President Roosevelt entered the White House the custom was regretfully but very wisely abandoned.

Began in New York.

It began in New York when that city was the seat of government. George Washington was accustomed to receive prominent government officials during the day and Mrs. Washington presided over a levee in the evening. The custom was continued in Philadelphia with the levees attended by both men and women who enjoyed the refreshments provided by the President and his wife, However, there was little handshaking and at the close of the affair the President usually gave a short speech appropriate to the occasion.

The first New Year's reception held in the White House in Washington was that of President John Adams and since the President's House or Palace, as it was then called, was still unfinished, it was held on the second floor, in the oval room. Although the public was invited to this affair, the same formality, which had characterized the levees held by George and Martha Washington, prevailed.

With the elevation of Thomas Jefferson to the Presidency the formal nature of the New Year's Day receptions changed radically. Although a member of the Virginia aristocracy, Jefferson was an extremely democratic gentleman, so much that he constantly shocked not only members of the diplomatic corps but his fellow-Washingtonians as well.

Unusual "Refreshments."

In fact one of the most unusual New Year's Day receptions in American history was held during his administration and it was unusual because of the "refreshments" served. It came about in this way:

When Jefferson was a candidate for President one of his most ardent supporters was the Rev. John Leland, a Baptist minister, long a resident of Virginia but at that time living in Cheshire, Mass. He knew what Jefferson had done for religious liberty in the Old Dominion and to show his appreciation he determined to aid Jefferson's election in any way he could. One Sunday he announced from the pulpit that every person who owned one or more cows was invited to bring one day's supply of milk to a cider mill owned by Capt. John Brown, a veteran of the Revolution.

As a result a great quantity of milk was brought to the mill and Leland announced that a huge cheese was to be made from it. When this was done, the minister mounted a block, led his people in singing a hymn and then announced that he was dedicating this cheese, the greatest the world had ever seen, to Jefferson to whom it was to be presented. Then the question arose as to how this huge cheese was to be transported over the 500 miles which separated Cheshire and Washington. But Leland was equal to that task. He waited until there was plenty of snow on the ground. Then he placed the cheese in a sleigh and drove it himself to Washington. Of its reception there a contemporary newspaper account said:

The Mammoth Cheese.

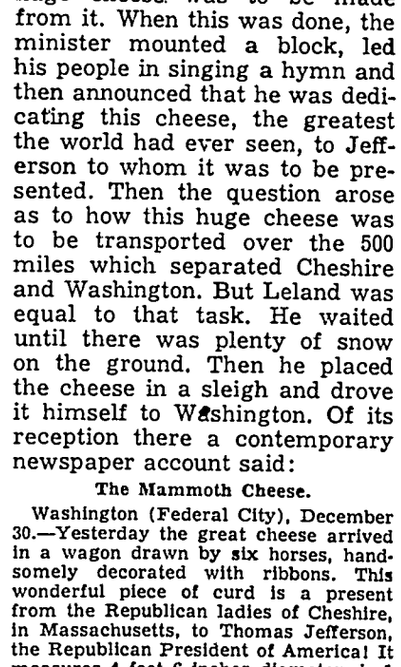
Washington (Federal City), December 30.—Yesterday the great cheese arrived in a wagon drawn by six horses, handsomely decorated with ribbons. This wonderful piece of curd is a present from the Republican ladies of Cheshire, in Massachusetts, to Thomas Jefferson, the Republican President of America! It measures 4 feet 6 inches diameter, is 1 foot 6 inches thick and weighs 1,250 pounds.

We understand that the President means, in a few days, to invite all the members of both houses, of both parties, to partake of this American cheese, accompanied with abundance of American biscuit and American porter. This will be indeed "the feast of reason and the flow of soul."

"We are all Federalists—we are all Republicans!"



ABRAHAM LINCOLN

And "partake of this American cheese" they did at the New Year's reception, after the Rev. Leland had presented it in person to Jefferson who made an appropriate speech in reply. He then cut off a piece, which he asked the minister to take back to the good people of Cheshire with his compliments.

When James Madison became President his vivacious wife, Dolly Madison, did a great deal of entertaining and their New Year's reception were lavish displays of hospitality. The same was true of the Monroes and their receptions were especially happy affairs because this was the "era of good feeling."

Adams is "Pushed Around."

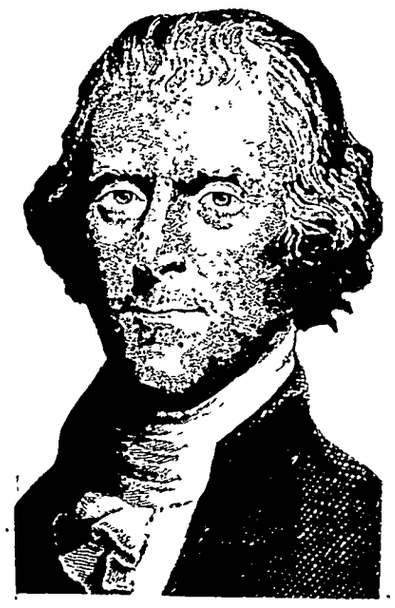
But the receptions given by John Quincy Adams were not such happy affairs—at least, not for that rather prim New Englander who was much harassed by the political situation of the times. "At one of these levees Mr. Adams was pushed about for more than two hours," says a contemporary chronicler. "He stood in the center of the center room and most pathetically shook hands the whole time. In the ladies' corner it was all chat, flutter and graceful bowing. In the hall a band was planted to keep the nerves of the company in the proper degree of agitation. There was talking, squealing, promenading, bowing, drinking coffee and sipping liquors."



THOMAS JEFFERSON

When "Old Hickory" Jackson became President, the riotous scenes at his inaugural and the reception afterwards were indicative of what would likely take place when the public was invited to the White House on New Year's Day. But "King Mob" seems to have behaved pretty well at those affairs, for there is no record of any unusually disorderly scenes to mar the receptions. Perhaps the presence at these January 1 functions of Jackson's favorite cabinet minister, Martin Van Buren, secretary of state, who was a "fine gentleman" and extremely formal, toned them down. Certainly when Van Buren became President the formality and decorous behaviour upon which he insisted gave the receptions a new dignity.

They Were Well Shaken.

But well-behaved though the public may have become when they visited the Executive Mansion, these receptions were still something of a trial to the President and his family, as witness this plaintive letter written of President John Tyler's daughter-in-law.

The first of January, 1842, is passed, never to return, and I am nearly to going off with it. I never felt so tired in all my life as I am this evening, standing up for two hours and shaking hands with I don't know how many thousands of people.

Such big fists as some of the people had, and such hard shakes as they gave my poor little hand, too! One great, hearty countryman gave me a clutch and a shake that I almost expired under.

But I couldn't help laughing when Fletcher Webster whispered to me, "when taken to be well shaken."

Eventually the crowds became so great and so unruly during this administration that Tyler found it necessary to have an extra detail of police on hand to handle the people. However, he was luckier in their reaction to this innovation than was one of his successors. Later a storm of protest was directed against James Buchanan because of the "gantlet of policemen" who surrounded the White House for his reception. There was good reason for having the officers there, however, for it is recorded that in the crush at least one pocket was picked and other disorders marred the occasion.

The Day of the Proclamation

One of the most important New Year's Day receptions ever held in the White House was that of January 1, 1863 and it was significant because of a momentous event which took place immediately afterwards. Abraham Lincoln had drawn up his Emancipation Proclamation, had read it to his cabinet and had won their approval of this document which would commit the government irrevocably to the destruction of slavery. At noon William H. Seward, secretary of state, brought the proclamation to Lincoln for his signature.

"I have been shaking hands since 9 o'clock this morning and my right hand is almost paralyzed" Lincoln told him. "If my name ever goes into history it will be for this act, and my whole soul is in it. If my hand trembles when I sign, all who examine the document hereafter will say 'He hesitated.'" Saying that he signed — but those who look upon the signature on that historic document now say that it was written as boldly, as firmly and as unfalteringly as any ever signed "A Lincoln."

Like Buchanan, Ulysses S. Grant was also severely criticized by the public in regard to the New Year's reception but for a different reason. Because of the death of Mrs. Belknap, wife of his secretary of war, he cancelled the function. Thereupon Washington gossips declared it was a bad breach of international good manners for the President to slight the foreign diplomats, who desired to pay their respects to the head of the American nation, simply because of an unfortunate tragedy, even though it was in the President's official family.

World War Aftermath.

In 1903, during the administration of Theodore Roosevelt, the public was especially eager to attend the reception because the White House had been extensively remodelled and the crowds which turned out to see the new decorations were among the largest in history. During President Wilson's administration the traditional functions on January 1 were discontinued but they were resumed in 1922 by President Harding. The reception that year was notable for the fact that it was the first public function since the war at which German and Austrian diplomats were present.

During the Harding, Coolidge and Hoover regimes the crowds, which lined up on the White House grounds on New Year's Day for the chance to shake hands with the President and the First Lady of the Land, often numbered as many as 6,000 persons. Because of the fact that greeting such a large number imposed a useless strain upon the man who carries the heaviest burden in our nation the annual reception was again omitted by the present administration.

Heirloom Handkerchiefs and Other

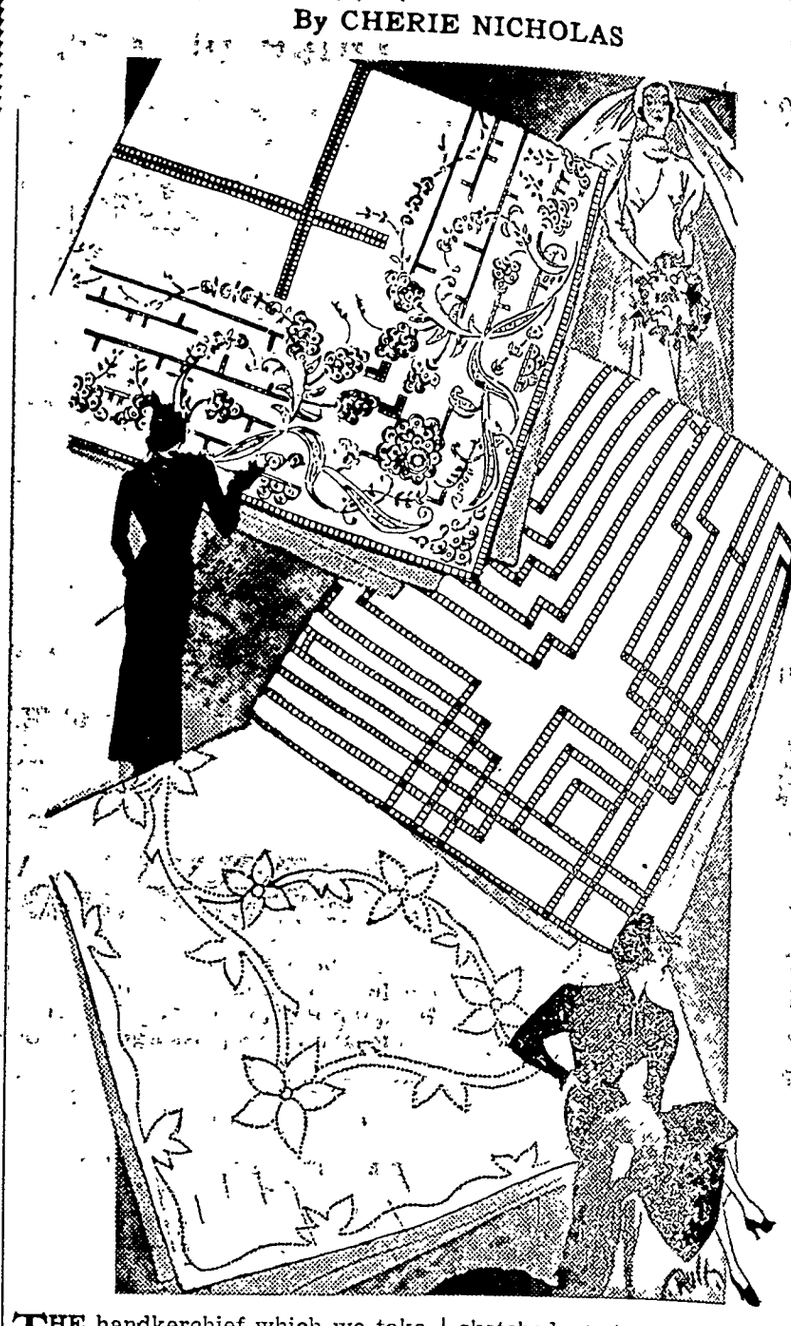
By CHERIE NICHOLAS



THE handkerchief which we take so much for granted was once a luxury permitted only to those of noble birth. A Hungarian queen of the Fourteenth century owned one silk handkerchief profusely embroidered and by decree of a German king in the Sixteenth century the handkerchief was permitted to those of noble birth only.

The first record of a handkerchief appears on an old Assyrian bas-relief, but even so Persia does not seem to have adopted it. According to Zenophon, Cyrus the Great in Persia forbade his subjects to blow their noses. In Egypt, at this time, royal subjects dried their tears on the bottom of their mantles.

Square handkerchiefs originated in France. Louis XIV made a law that all handkerchiefs, regardless of size and texture, must be made as broad as they were long.

Concerning the handkerchief as we of this day and age know it, as sands of the sea does it number, while fashion plays it up in every conceivable mood as a smart accent to the costume.

Not only is the modern handkerchief a "friend indeed in the time of need" but it is created a "thing of beauty"—a "joy forever" too, for the wedding kohlkerchief sketched at the top in the illustration proves just that, since it is a perfectly exquisite type such as the modern bride carries, to be handed down from generation to generation. Made of sheerest of hand-woven linen it is embroidered in fine seed, appenzel type needlework, the entire center spoked in squares. The flower centers in each corner are embellished with real pearls (48 in number), an accessory which becomes an heirloom even as the fine veil and lace may be handed down to posterity. However, delicate though it is in appearance it may be laundered

Other kohlkerchiefs (new name in modern fashion parlance for certain high-type handkerchiefs) have literally traveled half way round the world before they reached the United States. Here's how—the flax was raised in Belgium, then sent to Ireland where it was made into sheerest linen, much of it hand woven. The linen was sent to China where it was cut into the required sizes, stamped with designs created by American artists and embroidered by skilled Chinese needle women whose art dates back 2,000 years. When the handkerchiefs are finished to the last degree of perfection and artistry they are sent to America.

WOOL LACE HATS

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

Wool lace, so fashionable this winter, for daytime suits and dresses, is proving a perfect medium for smart sports headgear. When the outdoor event is to be followed by cocktails and an evening of dancing, what could be more apropos for the occasion than the trim little skull-cap chapeau shown here at the top? Of black wool lace it is just the thing for a windy afternoon and perky enough for any young blade to adore. Its trim of shiny black ostrich immediately makes it quite correct for the more formal aftermath. The other hat is also of black wool lace, showing to advantage its use for a chic sports model. The crown is quite high with the narrow-shaped brim broadening toward the front to make a flattering shield over the eyes. The large bow is of the same wool lace.

NEGLIGEES ASSUME HISTORICAL TREND

The sirens of the centuries have inspired the new negligees.

The high - waisted line of the glamorous Empress Josephine, the full - skirted silhouette of the Directoire belles and the trouser costumes of almond - eyed Oriental beauties have all left their mark on outfits designed for the lounging hours of modern fashionables.

The outstanding news is the ensemble effect generally combining two fabrics and two parts, a gown and house coat or pajama and jacket. Supple silk satin gowns designed as night dresses, but almost as formal in cut as evening frocks—are topped by hip-length or floor-length coats, often of a contrasting fabric.

Military Capes Are All the Rage Now in New York

Square-shouldered capes are taking New York by storm.

You see them in tweeds and furs, velvets and lames, worn by day and by night.

And they appear again in the advance showings of southern resort fashions, engaging the attention of resort-flitters just now.

The cape suit is a new success, in rough tweeds, suitable for town or country wear.

Usually it consists of matching skirt and fingertip-length cape, with contrasting fitted jacket.

The capes have the square shouldered dash of historical military costumes and are highly flattering to practically any type figure.

Prints Are Featured in Dresses for Resort Wear

The resort mode is breaking in print. Wild, high colored floral prints on white grounds are the trend of the times.

Some are in silk crepe and some are in cotton, some are in linen and some chiffon, but all are vivid to color and striking as to design.

These same prints are the ones you will be wearing next spring and summer, so if you aren't a southern bird of passage, you might still keep the subject in mind.

Russia's production of gold in- reases rapidly, with 144 gold fields ctive; the total production not less han $200,000,000 a year, and ac- ording to some estimates nearly 500,000,000.

Russia already surpasses Canada nd the United States in gold pro- uction, and expects soon to sur- ass the British South African gold elds, and all the gold goes to the overnment. Prospectors and min- rs get "praise."

It takes a long time to breed out of human beings that which is in- red into them through ages; hence the persistence of our various su- perstitions.

Intelligent Dr. Craster, health of- ficer of Newark, N. J., starts a needed campaign against kissing babies, suggesting the use of bibs embroidered with these words:

"I don't want to be sick—do not kiss me."

He says:

"A kiss can be more dangerous than a bomb."

Consumption begins in infancy; babies usually get it from tubercu- lar mothers who kiss them on the mouth.

Congress resumes work soon; what will it do, and try to do? How will it interpret the 46 to 2 vote, "all present" except Maine and Ver- mont, how will the unwieldy Demo- cratic majority deal with its prob- lems?

It will probably try to do what- ever President Roosevelt tells it to do; that last election seemed to intimate that the President has the public's permission to do as he pleases

And that makes the situation ex- tremely difficult for the President. There is such a thing as TOO MUCH approval, too much POWER.

Making a Choice—
Independence and Loneliness or Dependence With Ties of Affection

TO MOST persons there comes sometime in their lives the opportunity for a choice between independence and loneliness or ties and affection. The wise mature person thinks long before choosing the former above the latter. There are many young people, however, who feel so sure of themselves and their ability to "get along all right" that they are irked by the least restraint. They throw it off, only to discover later in life that affection is worth the curtailing restraint and dependence entailed. Companionship has been their portion up to the time of their decision that dependence is what they must have, at any cost. They have no idea of what loneliness means.

Separation.

The adult who is separated from his family because of distance, domestic estrangement, or who has outlived the other members, realizes to the full what it means to be alone. It is when estrangement causes the separation that there are times when the aloneness is bearable or agreeable, but these times are interrupted by hours when the feeling of loneliness creeps over him (or her), and companionship, though with but a small degree of affection, is craved.

Individuality.

Human nature is so constituted that people cannot live in the same atmosphere and always see eye to eye. There is wisdom in this plan. Individuality would be quelled if what any person thought (however beloved) could always be accepted without dissent by those around him (or her). Nor can actions of even those dear to us, invariably meet with our approval, whether expressed or unexpressed.

It is when we learn to permit personal differences without censure that companionship, in the home or out of it, develops best. Even when children are young, they must be allowed a modicum of such freedom or when older they will long to break away, and if they do then there is loneliness in store for the youth, and sadness left in the home.

Divorce.

Married couples, when they contemplate divorce, have the choice between independence plus loneliness, or dependence, each on the other with affection restored, or remaining less than could be desired. It may be there is incompatability, but it should be remembered that no two persons, married or single, can live together under the same roof and always be congenial. However, this does not signify that at heart affection is gone. Separation means loneliness for one or both of them.

Families.

Within a family there is sure to be some dissension at times—young folk may quarrel and adults dispute. But when these times are over, the ties of affection, the associations that intertwine, and the fabric of their lives so closely woven together, should prove a firm foundation for continued companionship. The door to loneliness should remain barred.
